

Drainville says first year opened his eyes

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

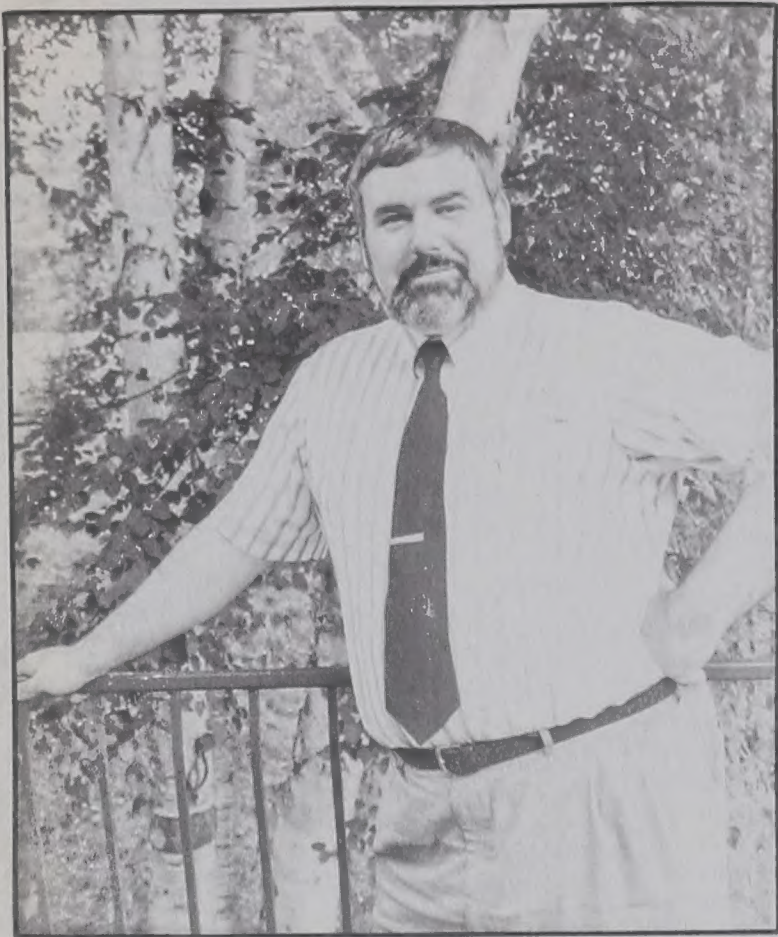

PERCEPTIONS AND REALITY are often not the same thing, whether you're inside the political world or on the outside looking in, says Dennis Drainville on the eve of his first anniversary of being elected to Queen's Park. "What is the valid point of view?" Drainville asks during a recent interview at Maple Sands Resort, where the New Democrat MPP had just met with concerned representatives of the local business and tourism communities. "The expectation is that when we take power we just push a few buttons and within three months it's solved. It doesn't work that way. Even my meagre expectations have been somewhat foiled. I expected more access to information and an ability to talk to the people (in charge). I've found that's not the case. The overall bureaucracy is so huge it's really difficult to get it to move and be more responsive to needs."

Drainville says there's no issue he's fought for harder than Haliburton County's need for chronic care beds, which were first promised by the previous Liberal government, guaranteed in a campaign speech by now-Premier Bob Rae, and then recommended by an 18-month study into the county's long-term healthcare needs. Yet because the beds haven't been built yet, some people say Drainville has already reneged on his election promises.

"It's been a lonely and difficult crusade of meetings, numerous phone calls, little chit chats with ministry officials," Drainville says of his efforts. "The fact that we don't have everything figured out yet is not a measure that nothing is going to happen. My hope is that we'll see something in the next six months. I'm very optimistic."

"But if people think I will wrestle the Ministry of Health to the ground and get results in 10 months, they've never dealt with the ministry

Councils tackle tax fugitives

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

Municipalities are getting tough with people who consistently don't pay their property taxes. "When we looked at our arrears, it seemed the only avenue left," says Dysart et al Clerk-administrator Donna McCallum of council's decision to sell 10 properties to collect back taxes. This is the first time in at least 15 years the municipality has exercised its right to seize and sell property if taxes aren't paid. Owners are given repeated warnings that this is the municipality's intent. When Dysart decided to "clean house" it began proceedings against 25 landowners. Most of those people paid the tax, or at least the portion most in arrears. "When push came to shove, people got their money in," McCallum says. This left Dysart with 10 properties advertised for sale by public tender. Two of those property owners promptly paid their taxes in full, plus all of the municipality's costs to date. "They weren't hardship cases," McCallum says of the owners' previous reluctance to pay the taxes since 1985. Property owners owe Dysart $77,000 in taxes due before 1990. People who haven't paid 1990 taxes create a shortfall of $230,000. So far this year, there is $1,205,000 still owing in tax bills. If Dysart doesn't have the cash in hand, sometimes at the end of the year it has to borrow and pay interest costs. The recession hasn't had that much of an impact on this year's arrears. The problem is "people who are behind aren't getting caught up." "We find we've got a lot of money out with the commercial people," says Linda Keown, Sherborne et al's tax collector. Business owners who have yet to pay last year's taxes are adding to their tax debt and interest payments. They might only pay a portion of the taxes, or last year's to get them out of trouble.

Future of SkySlider is once again up in the air

by SUSAN CAMPBELL
Staff Reporter

The fate of the SkySlider is once again in question after negotiations between the slide's owner and Dysart et al council hit another impasse last week. "I don't understand," said Steve Bowskill. "They say one parking space every 20 square metres of building, but this is a by-law they haven't even passed."

Bowskill has presented several proposals to council in the last few months requesting approval to build a new social services building next to Hillside House at the base of the SkySlider. Last month, Bowskill offered to take down the Slide if he could transfer its sewage capacity to the new building and relieve the municipality of its responsibility for damage to the water supply or excess sewage. But last week, the parking issue came to the fore again. "Mr. Bowskill said originally he would close down the SkySlider and generate parking in that area," said Councillor Lloyd Leadbeater. Bowskill's latest proposal was to leave the SkySlider standing for five years, build the addition on his property and pave the municipal road allowance for parking. In five years, a new $1.5-million track would have to be installed so he

Accident kills woman

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

A Whitby woman is dead after the car she was riding in was broadsided by a transport truck on Highway 35 in Minden. Saturday's accident occurred when a northbound car driven by Robert Bradburn, 74, also of Whitby, was struck by a Kawartha Dairy truck driven by Jeffrey Crowe, 42, of Bobcaygeon. Bradburn was making a left-hand turn off Highway 35 onto Minden's Main Street near Moynes Furniture, when his car was hit by Crowe's southbound truck. Bradburn's passenger, Hilda Cockburn, 62, was severely injured and had to be removed from the wreck by the Minden Fire Department, who used the Jaws of Life. Cockburn died from massive injuries a short time later at Minden Hospital. Bradburn is in critical but stable condition at Toronto's Sunnybrook Hospital. Crowe was not injured. Minden OPP are investigating and charges are pending.

Couple scores best home run of lives

by MARTHA PERKINS

Resplendent in white with blue trimming, her cascading brown hair haloed in the glow of light emanating from centre field, the bride looked lovingly into the groom's eyes and said, "I do." Dressed in a matching white uniform with blue trimming, a corsage pinned to his jersey, the groom dug his running shoes into the wet dirt and said, "I do." On Saturday night, just after the last game at the West Guilford lob ball tournament, players Sandi Weir and Joe Cockburn scored the most important home run of their life. The two are now tied 1-1 in matrimony. As the minister pitched his message about sharing each other's love and future, the best man and bridesmaid — dressed in matching blue baseball uniforms with white trimming — were all that separated the couple from the onlookers lining the West Guilford baseball diamond. Two cars parked in centre field provided the lighting, and just a few minutes earlier, a portable stereo played a favourite song as the crowds parted to let the bride — complete with a flowery lace tiara, bouquet, spotless new uniform and white running shoes — walk gracefully to home plate. Somewhat bedraggled, their shorts and t-shirts wet and muddy from the early evening rain, the family, friends and curious bystanders let out a cheer and "Let's party" as the new husband and wife embraced. Not quite your conventional wedding, but the newlyweds knew this was where their hearts belonged. "We figured we met during baseball, fell in love during baseball and love playing baseball so we might as well get married at baseball," Ms. Weir says a few hours before the wedding, sitting under a tree at the Guilford park while the 3rd Annual Mixed Lob Ball Tourney is underway. "Baseball's our life." At least every other weekend, the Toronto couple is playing ball — they even play snow ball in the winter. Instead of being a baseball before. Haliburton's proposal (for 40 chronic care beds) will be one of the first dealing within the parameters of this new philosophy of long-term healthcare. The government really wants to see this thing work so I think we'll receive support. It's almost a pilot project.

MPP is working behind the scenes

"The efforts being made are monumental and my hope is they'll bear fruit."

Another complaint is that Drainville is spending too much time on social issues, and not enough on the nuts and bolts of running a municipality. Before he was elected, Drainville's career was as an Anglican priest and well-known Toronto activist for poverty groups. In the spring, the MPP was jailed for three days for protesting against the Liberal government's logging of land claimed by the Teme Augama Anishnabai in Temegami.

"You've got to distinguish what the reality is," he says in response. "I have had no contact with the Indians in Temegami since then. When I do something like Temegami, it's all over the papers," but when he's working behind the scenes to elicit change and progress for Victoria-Haliburton, his actions go unnoticed.

"You've got other fish to fry and I understand it," he says of the newspaper's lack of interest in some of his other pursuits. "You're half the reason why people don't know what I'm doing in other areas."

Because of the recession, Drainville's Lindsay office has been besieged by requests for assistance. His two full-time and one part-time assistant use a machine to answer calls because, the message says, they're busy getting caught up on all the present cases.

"The need is there," Drainville says of the human cost of economic bad times. "Our volume is beyond anything we can cope with. There are hundreds of cases my staff is working on and half of them need immediate action."

Drainville is asked why his office is dealing with the cases, not the ministry offices concerned. There are cases which fall through the cracks, he says, people who were mistakenly denied social or assistance or support.

"We become a bit like an advocate. Did (the government agency) have all the facts? At times the decision was correct but we have to go through the process. We are a catalyst."

"The sad thing is there are cases where the staff hours will be monumental, then we'll find we can't solve (the problem) and the thing (the constituent) wanted to happen doesn't happen. All of a sudden you didn't do any work. There's not an answer for every problem, every concern."

Perhaps a person cannot be helped now but the MPP might discover flaws in the system which he can address. And he remains committed to battling against those things which are threatening our environment.

Even though he's now part of the system, Drainville says in essence he has not changed.

"I find myself, even among my own colleagues, a bit of an odd ball," laughs the man who relaxes with Tolkein or Plato. "These things give me spiritual sustenance — philosophy and poetry and religion."

As a pre-politics activist, he quickly learned that "if I could get the media to focus in on an issue in a negative way, I was able to get things happening. If you do those things as a government member, you won't be a government member for long. . . . We may not like the system but you're

"I don't say things I don't believe in ... I don't say things because they're, quote, the party lines. Instead you'll find me strangely silent - but I'm not silent within my party."

elected to get the government's point of view across."

When he defends his government's actions, he may sound as if he's simply following orders, but as a matter of principle "I don't say things I don't believe in. . . . I don't say things because they're, quote, the party line. Instead you'll find me strangely silent — but I'm not silent within my party."

The New Democrats have a united front in public but caucus meetings, of which Drainville was the chairman, are full of disagreements. He also says he works behind the scenes to get his message across.

As well as being chairman of the caucus when he was first elected, Drainville was parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Citizenship. Now he is the acting chair of the constitutional committee, an issue dear to his heart, parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and is on the environment committee.

Asked whether he's disappointed Premier Rae hasn't asked him to be on cabinet yet, Drainville says "one thing I've learned is how I've been given the opportunity to learn what it means to be an MPP before (being asked) to be a cabinet minister." As a minister, he'd have far less time to spend in the riding, even though people would still expect him to attend all the functions. "You can't have it both ways."

Sometimes he finds there's a bias against rural Ontario's needs at Queen's Park. Asked if small-town Ontario gets a fair shake, "My gut tells me no, they don't. I sometimes feel (decisions) emanate from the ivory tower of Toronto to the hinterland."

If he sees such condescension, however, he's quick to speak out against it. "Ministry officials," he laughs, "knowing they'll be put on the hotseat with me, are very careful about how they approach me. If there's any hint of 'we know what's best for you' or 'leave it to us', I've been in meetings where I've gone right after them. . . . This is a structural thing."

He's just as willing to go right after critics of his government. This spring's $9.7-billion deficit is a thorn in the side of the business community which feels it no longer has a voice in provincial decisions.

"We did exactly what (Conservative premier) Bill Davis did in 1983," Drainville says somewhat testily. "Our action is not an example of, quote, socialism running amuck. We believe we're right and time will tell, that's the reality of it. The government is faced with a set of circumstances you have to assess and respond to."

"... There are signs the recession is on the wane but we still have problems (with decreased) revenues. We are cutting programs left and right, reining in all over the place. People think we're just spending but to have that deficit, we had to cut. We're asking pointed questions on whether we can continue with this program or that."

As well, a group of economists, including Canada-born John Kenneth Galbraith, and the Conference Board of Canada — which hasn't always been a soulmate of the NDP — have reported that the NDP's budget was a good one for the bad times.

No one likes to see people lose their jobs or entrepreneurs losing their business, things which add to the pressure of being a politician. On the other hand, he adds, no politician can deal effectively with people's problems if people won't listen to the politician's side of the argument.

"One thing I can't get used to is the variety of responses when people see me on the street. Some are practically sputtering with rage, but the number of people who come up to me about Temegami and say 'I support you because of what you did' (has been gratifying)."

Discussion with the local business and tourism representatives went smoothly because both sides were open and honest. "I enjoyed it," Drainville says. "They had some very legitimate concerns and presented them in a way that was challenging and allowed for reasonable discourse. It's no help to come up to me and go crazy."

City colleagues who have only to deal with one or two aldermen are amazed that Drainville has to work with and respond to 30 municipalities in two counties. "They just shake their heads. I'm constantly talking to people, negotiating, trying to help them with funding. The major point is just keeping up to date, and I really think it's important to be out with the people. The problem is the size of the riding."

But Drainville thinks not being from Toronto is "a luxurious position."

"The farther you are from Queen's Park, the clearer your perspective becomes. There is no riding I'd rather represent. I love being here, the events we have, the value system we have. Community life is a priority and I wouldn't trade that for anything."

MPP is heading the new confederation committee

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

Victoria-Haliburton MPP Dennis Drainville is the new acting chairperson of the Select Committee on Ontario in Confederation.

"Our mandate is to go out into all parts of Ontario and meet with all the people of the province," says Drainville. "People can tell their MPPs what they think about Ontario in confederation."

At the end of August he will travel with others to Western Canada, and in the fall he will visit Ottawa and Quebec City. A conference of all the committees will be held in Toronto on October 17 and 18.

He says he was chosen as acting-chairperson on Premier Bob Rae's advice because he was born in Quebec, is bilingual, and has chaired similar committees in the past.

Drainville says the committee is trying to reach as many people as possible in order to "ensure the Meech Lake debacle isn't perpetuated."

Drainville will be acting-chairperson until his appointment is made official by the legislature when it reconvenes in September.

Drainville has also just been appointed a member of the Cabinet Committee on the Environment. He says his involvement in environmental issues has been "a public one," and that being from a rural riding gives him perspective on the issue.

Public has tough queries on county's Official Plan

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

The county held an open house in Haliburton on Saturday to inform and answer the questions of the public about its Official Plan process, and found the public had some tough questions to ask.

"Why bother doing an Official Plan," asked Godfrey Tyler. "You go through this whole process and the first individual comes along and asks for something that's not in it and you change the plan? Why do it when every day you change things, at each meeting things are changed?"

But county representatives were ready to answer. "Haliburton County has to have a direction for the next five, 10, 15 years," said Snowdon Reeve George Simmons. "We need a balance of municipal and county development."

County Planner Mark Stagg said the effectiveness of a county plan relies on county residents and county council. "It can be strong and direct, or a weak, mother-and-apple-pie thing. If council is strong and acts as needed in the local interests then it can be a good tool. But it depends how county council acts. If the will is out there it will work."

Stagg suggested the plan wouldn't be fully formed until 1994, and a further year would be needed to gain provincial approval. Tyler asked why it would take so long, and why the county does not simply pick up another county's plan and fit it to Haliburton's needs.

Stagg said very specific information would be needed for Haliburton County, but the main reason for the long time-line is to allow the public to become involved. "If I could go into a room and say 'Here's Mark Stagg's plan,' then it would take six months. But we can't do that. This allows all parties to become involved. In other areas where they rushed no-one supports the plan."

"With a little extra time, experience tells us that's what works best," said Stagg. "I'm fairly new here, and when I got here people told me to slow down, I was moving too fast. People don't want to be rushed."

Stagg also noted formulating the OP will cost a lot of money, and if it is spread over a number of years the county will be better able to afford it.

Someone asked if the county's plan will not duplicate a lot of what municipal official plans have already laid out. "I hope the only things this plan tackles are on a county level. We don't want a conflict between the county and municipalities."

Stagg said "there should be no duplication. We set up broad plans, and the townships do more detailed things with their own areas. No doubt we'll share some areas, but we'll also be able to work together."

The open house was part demonstration of the process and objectives of the official plan, and part question and answer.

Stagg said the plan is trying to "set a vision of the future", to find out "where we want to go for the next 10 or 20 years."

The plan will touch on areas such as economic growth, population growth, use of land, affordable housing, and water quality in lakes and wells.

On almost all topics people raised concerns. One asked if economic growth would slow and stop as the best lake lots are sold and good land becomes harder and harder to buy.

Another asked if the county would get tough with people with old septic systems that were leaking.

Others asked about landfill sites.

Municipalities getting tough

fair but it just comes to the point where you have to do something," Keown says.

In one case, the owner of an island died 30 years ago and left everything to a trustee who was a lawyer. The lawyer died without a will so even though the municipality has been able to track down surviving family members in New York, the family is not legally entitled to the land.

The island is too small to build on and the lake association is hoping to raise enough money to buy it.

People who think sales by public tender offer bargain basement prices are often disappointed. "It's rarely choice pieces of property," Keown says.

When a property is sold and the municipality recovers all of its costs and taxes, the remaining money must sit in the courts for a year, during which time the owner has a right to claim it, which most do. If the money isn't claimed, it goes to the municipality.

"The intent is that the municipality gets its taxes, not that it makes a tremendous amount of money," Dysart's McCallum says.

CAS's new worker ready for change

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

Rural Haliburton and urban London do not have a lot in common, but the new Children's Aid Society social worker says she is looking forward to settling in.

"I wanted to try something different, see a different part of Ontario," says Sonya Vellenga, who just graduated from the social work program at the University of Western Ontario.

And although she has lived in London for four years, her background is rural. She grew up on a dairy farm outside Hamilton, and says this should help her understand the way people in Haliburton County think and feel.

"There are some differences between rural and urban work. Urban work is a lot faster, both for you and the people you work with. It's a different mentality. In rural areas people are more relaxed, and you can work with them more slowly."

Vellenga will work with families, "hooking them up with other services. I'll be meeting with children and care-givers and make sure everything's okay. We try to work in a protective and preventative way."

She says social work isn't easy, but "it's a challenging, creative career, not without its frustrations. It's never the same thing every day. You always face something different."

"You have to learn to be patient. You see things in individuals, you see things you'd like to change. You see areas where there can be growth, and the obstacles can be frustrating."

But she says she likes working with people, and has in the past worked in group homes for people with mental and physical disabilities, as well as working with young offenders.

Her course was run through King's College, an affiliate of Western. She says the four years she spent there taught her a lot. "It seems like ages ago now. They really worked hard at teaching us assessment and trans-verbal skills. We learned about different situations and dealing with varieties of individuals."

Vellenga came to Haliburton three weeks ago, and says so far "it's great. The weather's wonderful and it's beautiful here."

would simply close the building.

Council steadfastly refuses to let him use municipal lands to fulfill his obligations. It wants to ensure parking is part of the deal by updating the zoning by-law, effectively forcing Bowskill to create more space using the SkySlider property.

Dysart Planning Administrator Jody Ainsworth said it was not possible to say when the new by-law would come into effect, but that it will apply to all new professional and office buildings in the municipality.

"I'm going to give it one more kick at the can, but otherwise I'll start dismantling SkySlider in September," says Bowskill.

"The proposal I made was equitable and fair. Who does council represent? Certainly not the 25 people working there or the downtown business people."

An Echo reader also expressed her concern about the closure of the SkySlider in a letter last week.

"A neighbour and I were wondering if Haliburton residents are aware of the many dollars this attraction pumps into the local economy," writes Bonnie Buxton, a Highland Grove cottager.

"Cottagers fed up with bored kids come into Haliburton, buy a day pass and leave the kids there for the day...Then the beleaguered parents are free to spend the entire day exploring Haliburton.

"We can have a nice lunch, shop, buy groceries, and do our laundry. Most times we contribute more than $100 to the Haliburton coffers — not including the cost of the waterslide. And there are many parents like us."

All invited to boat safety talk

Boating safety is a major issue for many Haliburton County taxpayers. And on Labour Day Weekend, those who have been bothered by boaters may want to attend Kushog Lake's annual meeting.

Guest speaker will be OPP Staff Sgt. Larry Smith, provincial co-ordinator of the OPP's marine section.

"We're very privileged to have him," says Norma Goodger, past president of the Kushog Lake cottagers association, extending an invitation to any Highlands lake resident. "It's a good opportunity to ask him questions on issues such as watercraft and noise and speed violations."

As marine co-ordinator, it's Smith's responsibility to manage all OPP boats patrolling Ontario's lakes.

"He's the guy in charge to air any complaints to," says Goodger.

The regular meeting begins at 10 a.m., with registration at 9, on Saturday August 31, at the Stanhope Firefighters Hall. The meeting is open to everyone and if you have any questions, please contact Norma Goodger at 489-2966, or (416) 491-8948.

If they had been charging admission to Zion United Church's Sunday Centennial service they would have made a fortune.

So many people — well over 120 — showed up to worship and share in the 100th birthday of the Carnarvon church that many had to sit outside on chairs hastily arranged for the overflow.

Clarke MacDonald, the former moderator of the United Church and guest preacher, said "You have shown you are a vital, organic community. But the achievement is not yours alone, or that of your strength, but also of worship, prayer, the singing of hymns — all for the glory of God."

Stanhope Reeve Harry Davis hit a lighter note. When people were asked to hold up their hands to show if they were going to stay for the pancake breakfast that followed the service, Davis said "when you are counting those hands outside I think you'll find a lot of hungry Anglicans. You might have 125 in the congregation, but you'll see 200 hands up for the pancakes."

Describing himself as one of the hungry Anglicans, MPP Dennis

Drainville, who's also an Anglican priest, praised the church for having "so many different kinds of people who can come together, give their lives to God, and by coming together create something beautiful and unique."

Drainville presented the church with a plaque signed by Premier Bob Rae.

From the opposite political corner, a plaque from MP Bill Scott was presented in his absence.

But one of the most moving testaments to the church's community came from Ruth Gorrie, who said "when my husband's father died, and we came back from the cemetery, the ladies from the church were there in the house and they had set up a beautiful buffet. We hardly knew them. And when my mother died they were there again."

"It's been a wonderful year of fellowship when the church really needed it. And it's nice to see the men take such a part. Usually you see the ladies serving at all the functions, but the men have been right in there as well."

Ed Moll, the regular minister, says Zion has a "thriving congregation. There is an incredible amount of lay leadership dedicated to the work of God here."

He doesn't know what will happen in the next 100 years, but "it's a very active church, and it'll continue its work for generations to come. I'm confident — so are they."

Afterwards, Hazel Gregory, who has been a member of the church since 1948, and whose father was a member before her, says "this has been wonderful. It's so thrilling, it's a real celebration. I'm very proud to be a part of it."

Most of the worshippers stayed on after the service to enjoy the breakfast of sausages and pancakes. The church hall was filled with people talking and reminiscing and looking back on a church and community that has thrived for 100 years and shows every sign of enjoying a stable future.

Mabel Russell, who has been in the congregation since 1945, says "it's a real privilege to be here. All the celebrations have been great." She says the "church has changed a bit. There is not so much youth now, but it's coming back."

And during the service youth was evident, in the group of ushers, collection gatherers and communion attendants. "They're coming back again, and just having the youth take part adds a lot to life," says Russell.

Zion United parishioners do what they've done for a century— enjoy each other's company, and worship as a community bonded by spirit. After Sunday's centennial service, people enjoyed a hearty pancake brunch served up by Eleanor Kleinschmidt and Sam Rogers

Calling for 'special friends'

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

Growing up, most of us had a "special friend". That one person who stood by us and shared our deepest and silliest thoughts.

Unfortunately, many children never have the chance to have a "special friend". The Kawartha-Haliburton Children's Aid Society is now taking volunteers to be part of its Special Friend and Parent Assistant programs.

"We're looking for people who would like to be a role model. Many kids may not have someone in their lives to look up to," says Tania Nanni, CAS's program coordinator for volunteers.

The Special Friend program is similar in nature to Big Brothers. For a certain number of hours per week a volunteer provides companionship for a child in Haliburton County.

"A volunteer can spend as little or much time as they wish to offer," says Nanni, who suggests two or three hours a week as an average.

The Parent Assistant program works very much the same way. A volunteer will help out a parent, who could be a single parent who needs someone to watch the kids while he or she is getting supper ready.

"Maturity is more important than age," Nanni says of what the CAS is looking for in a volunteer, which the Haliburton CAS has always needed because of caseload increases.

Nanni estimates two Special Friends will be required and two to three Parent Assistants. Volunteers will be screened and provided with training.

The Ministry of Natural Resources may begin negotiating individual Gypsy moth spray agreements with the 18 regions which make up Ontario's Gypsy Moth Management Committee.

On Thursday, eight GMMC members met with Natural Resources Minister Bud Wildman in an effort to continue negotiations for a new spray agreement.

Wildman stood fast on his ministry's original offer of charging landowners $60 for spraying their first three acres, using a sliding scale of $15, $10, and $1 to accommodate larger acreages. This same offer was rejected by the GMMC at meeting last week in Haliburton.

"I can honestly say I was disappointed in the tone of that meeting," said GMMC Chairman and Dysart Reeve Bill Davis.

He said Wildman met with his delegation for 20 minutes, leaving a select group of his deputy ministers to listen to the committee's proposal. The committee suggested charging landowners between $25 and $30 for up to two acres of spraying and using a sliding scale for larger areas.

"The committee's latest proposal is substantially less than its earlier offers, and therefore, I was forced to reject it as too costly for taxpayers," said Wildman in a release Friday.

Under the GMMC's present agreement, which expires December 31, 1991, landowners pay $6 per acre and are subsidized for the remainder by the MNR. The committee realizes $6 was low and tough economic times have called for stricter measures. However, a solution needs to be found immediately.

"I can say right now Haliburton County will stay in the spray program," Davis said, adding other committee members may chose to drop out. The group hopes to meet later this week in Peterborough.

Kennisis association lauds Dysart's efforts

by SUSAN CAMPBELL
Staff Reporter

The municipality has fulfilled the expectations of the Kennisis Lake Cottage Owners Association 100 percent when it comes to road maintenance, the association's president told Dysart et al council last Monday.

"Behind us are the elected officials of Dysart et al, and we thank you for your support of road building and maintenance on Kennisis Lake Road," Bob Wigmore said during the association's annual presentation before council.

There were several suggestions on how to improve road safety, and association member Gary Benson asked what could be done to gradually upgrade the road. Councillor Murray Fearrey said it was unreasonable to spend all the money on improving it all at once, and it was best to "just keep working at it."

Wigmore also suggested that the municipality come up with stricter guidelines at the dump serving Kennisis Lake residents.

"If we don't clean up our act through certain by-laws, then the Ministry is going to come in and do it for us," said Wigmore. He suggested that the dump could be managed with minimal supervision if it were closed for three days of the week.

"It can't operate every day, all hours. The dump only has a lifespan of a few years — where are you going to establish a new site when it's all filled up?" he asked.

Reeve Bill Davis said the municipality was working with the Ministry of the Environment to create uniformity of operations at all sites.

Wigmore also brought up the idea of an "environmental service tax" of $5 to $10 a year to help pay for such services as cleaning up the landfill site and processing drinking water from the lake.

"I think it would wash," said Wigmore. "People are concerned we'll lose something environmentally at Kennisis Lake. Perhaps council can look at this in greater depth."

Also on the KLCOA's agenda was the possibility of establishing a community hall/ firehall within five miles of cottages. Having these services on Kennisis Lake Road would save people $80 to $100 a year, said Wigmore.

Fed-up landowner may challenge ministry rules

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

Angered over what he considers are unfair and vague government policies, a Stanhope man has questioned official shoreline development guidelines.

William Branson, whose applications to sever shoreline lots on Lake Kushog were recently rejected by two ministries, came before council Wednesday to garner support for a two-part plan for "safely" adding development on lakes marked at full capacity.

The plan, outlined by Branson's solicitor, involves leaving a shoreline buffer zone to provide a natural barrier for phosphorous seepage. Added protection would be provided by a soil mixture, which partially consists of a type of a local pit soil, to filter the proposed development's tile beds.

"Mr. Branson is prepared to battle Queen's Park," said lawyer Michael Michalski. He feels his client is the victim of unjust policies of the Ministries of the Environment and Natural Resources.

Shoreline development increases phosphorous levels, which in turn promotes algae and steals oxygen from the lake. This raises the temperature of the lake harming its fish population, including lake trout.

"We don't disagree with the ministries that the trout is scarce, but they are saying the lake can't handle one more ounce of phosphorous," said Michalski, a former MOE employee.

He's convinced phosphorous levels are only partly responsible for the trouts' disappearance in Lake Kushog. "Kushog has been changing because of its deep basin," he said, adding that stocking the lake with fish raised in hatcheries doesn't help the situation. "Over the last 12,000 years, the lake trout have genetically adapted."

In theory, both he and his client feel the lake can handle more development, providing it's done properly. "I like quality development, but we need to do it the right way," said Branson, who wants to sever lots for members of his family from a 32-acre parcel of land. He is frustrated and feels both ministries will not take his plan seriously.

By obtaining the support of Stanhope council, Branson hopes this will provide him with some leverage.

"We should hear both sides of the story first," said Reeve Harry Davis. "But I agree in principle."

Before passing a vague resolution to signify their support, council was assured the municipality would not incur any financial responsibilities should Branson receive approval. Michalski suggested Branson would set up a trust to pay for any changes that may occur once the development went in. These could include upgrading the tile beds if it should become necessary.

Michalski also said regular inspections could be made by the municipality's by-law enforcement officer to make sure everything was on the up and up. "We don't know what all the details of it will be yet," he said.

Councils support resolution

To express their discontent over the province's recently passed Development Charges Act, Stanhope, Dysart et al and Lutterworth have agreed to support a resolution from the Township of Euphrasia.

The southern Georgian Bay municipality wants Queen's Park to allow townships with an electorate of less than 5,000 to charge lot levies up to a maximum of $1,000.

Under the Act, the province is asking all municipalities, regardless of size, to pass a by-law setting out a levy schedule by November 23, 1991, otherwise they forgo their right to levies.

But in order to get a by-law in place, each municipality must determine what levies would be appropriate. Recent prices quoted to Stanhope council for a study ranged between $5,000 to $7,000.

Lot levies are charged to ensure municipalities are covered for any extra costs which may incur in order to provide all necessary and extra services for a building lot.

A year later

It's hard to criticize someone whose heart is in the right place, as Dennis Drainville's certainly is. How can one question the integrity and commitment of a politician who's also an Anglican priest? Of a man whose voice fairly rings with compassion and loving kindness towards his fellow man? (Being as politically correct as a politician must be nowadays, that should be "towards humankind.") Yet even Mr. Drainville knows the honeymoon has to end sometime. Almost a year ago, in a wide-ranging interview with The Echo to introduce the people to the man they had just elected as Victoria-Haliburton's first New Democrat Member of Provincial Parliament, Mr. Drainville said he welcomed the opportunity to answer the somewhat innocuous questions about his past and his beliefs. He knew there would come a time when the questions would be more pointed, more controversial, filled with more anger and skepticism. That time is now upon us.

For the media, Mr. Drainville was a welcome addition to the political scene. Erudite, intelligent — he knows that clauses are not the same things as sentences, which he can string together eloquently — and a thoughtful and slow speaker, his every sentence is a perfect quote. Years of sermons have obviously taught him how to clearly and convincingly express his opinions. Other politicians sound hollow; Drainville sounds as if he's spent a lifetime on the mountaintop searching for the answers.

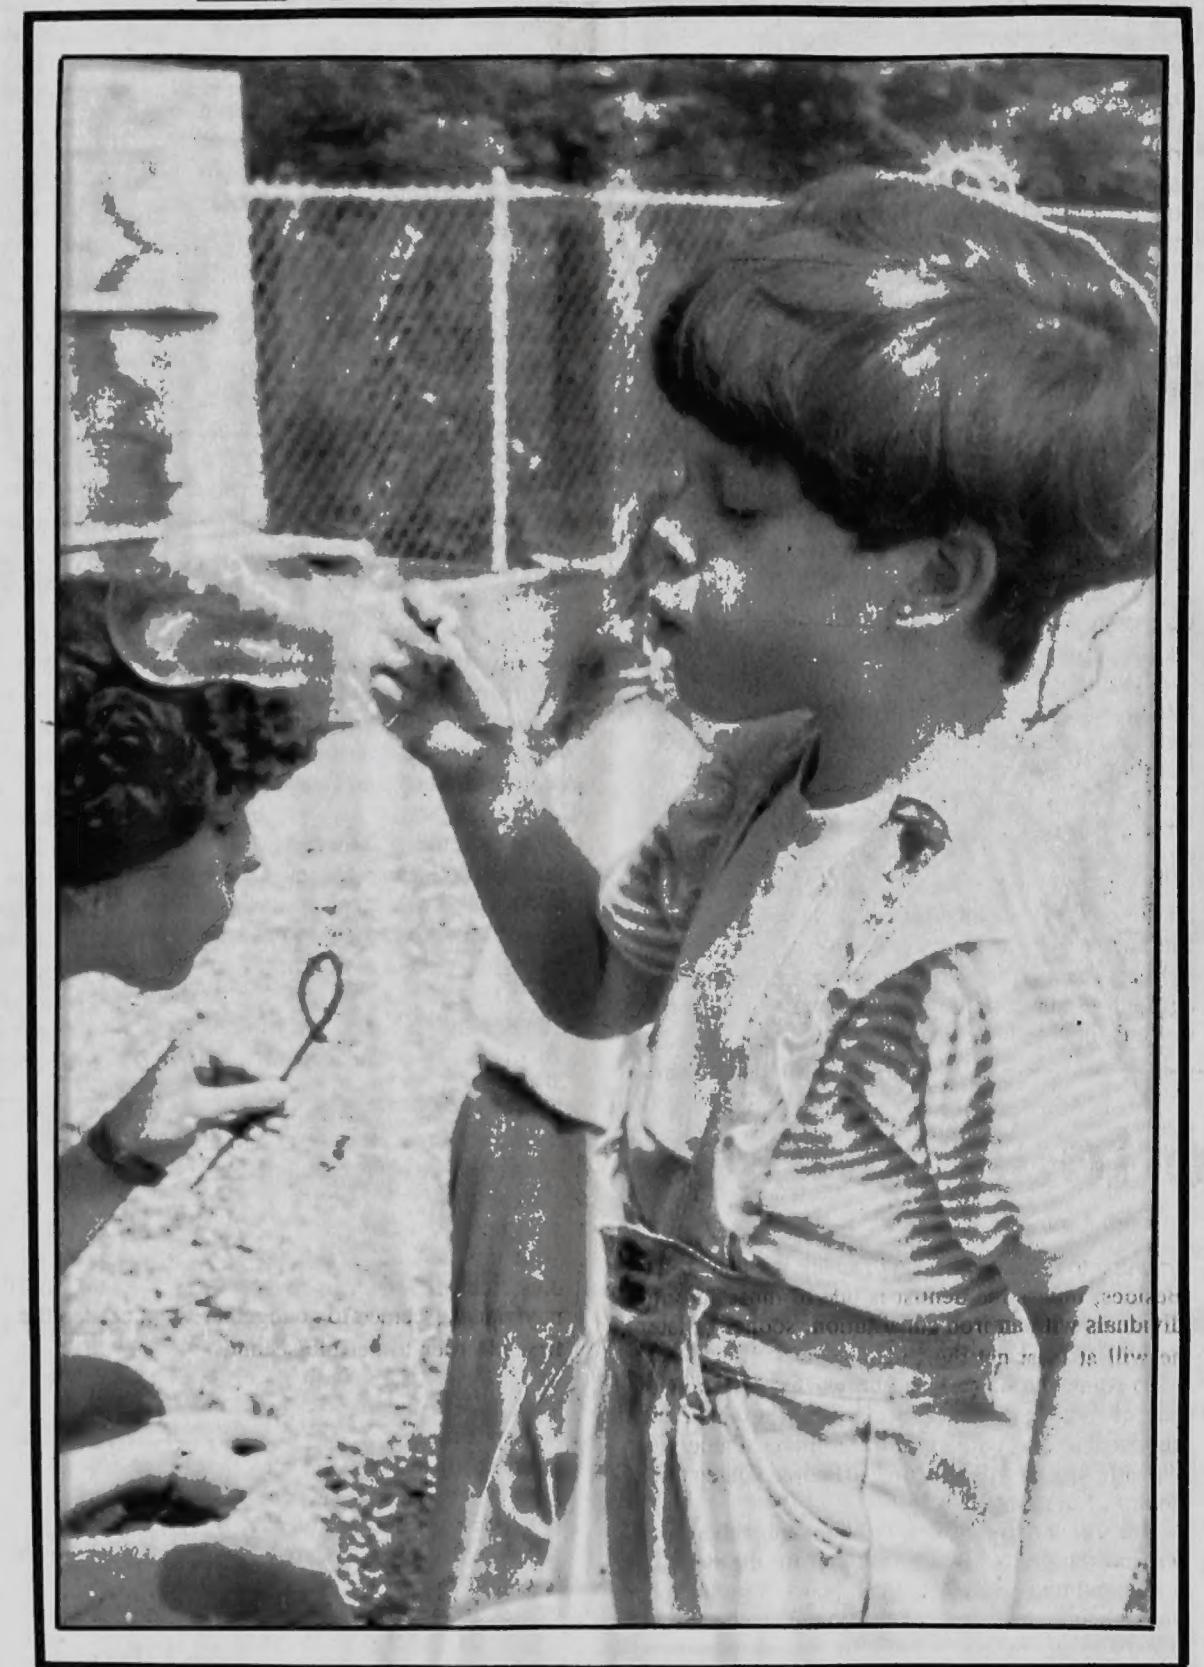

Constituents cannot live on perfect quotes alone, however. One of the main complaints heard in Haliburton County is Dennis Drainville is not aware of the nuts and bolts of running a municipality, let alone the province. Compassion and caring are fine and good, but people also need the Haliburton sewage treatment plant to be upgraded, relief from taxation, improved services, and an effective business community which can help put money in their pockets so they'll have less to complain about. Mr. Drainville is very good at dealing with people's suffering during this recession, but not so proficient at understanding the root causes. In many cases, big business and Bay Street have their noses out of joint because they no longer pull the purse strings, but a "socialist" government cannot ignore the vital role business plays in all aspects of life. It may be an exaggeration, but the cabinet seems full of people who are accustomed to spending government dollars and have no experience of what it takes to produce those dollars. That doesn't lessen their right to be leaders of government; it shows they must drop their "us versus them" attitude towards business. The "them" has become "us" because the New Democrats are now dependent on the dollars created by a viable economy — and viable means being able to profit from your efforts, not give all the money to the government. Labour may be their traditional pillar of support, but labourers need to have jobs and jobs are created when there's a dollar to be made.

Mr. Drainville's compassion also runs deep for the poor and downtrodden, as should everyone's. But dealing individually with hundreds of cases isn't doing anyone any good, especially when approximately 60 per cent of the costs of social assistance programs are already for administration. Even when former MPP John Eakins was a cabinet minister, his Lindsay office staff of two never had to use an answering machine. This isn't saying Drainville's staff isn't busy, but why? If people find a willing ear, they'll bend it. Their stories may be sad, but having someone care about them won't guarantee their happiness. Drainville even admits that some people get angry when after hours of work, his staff finds the system was right after all. No one should be surprised. Unfortunately, the more you give to people the more they'll expect. Have a problem? The government will fix it. Why worry about waste — it's the government's money. To be happy, people need to feel that they're valued members of society, that they have a contribution to make.

Society needs compassionate people such as Dennis Drainville. It also needs politicians who can deliver.

Emergency visitor felt cheated

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

OUR READERS WRITE...

To the Editor:

On Sunday of the long weekend, my husband and I and our three boys went to the Haliburton Hospital emergency department because my two-year-old son had an infected wound. We arrived at 12:30 and because the waiting room was so full, we had to wait outside. When we arrived, the other patients laughed as they started to tell us how long they had been there. A nurse took our information but we never did get to see the doctor on call. By six o'clock, we decided to leave. We returned to our cottage, where two hours later friends offered to drive us to Peterborough because there was no gas in our car and no gas station was open.

An hour after we arrived in Peterborough, our son had been treated by a doctor and given a prescription for antibiotics.

The article in last week's Echo said that the 12 people who left did so because they decided "their problem really wasn't such an emergency." We left because we had already spent six hours there and weren't getting anywhere. I felt ripped off, as if my son's problem wasn't worth looking at. Also, I have never had to wait more than two hours in any city hospital.

I'd just like to see better service at the Haliburton Hospital, especially on long weekends in the summer when people know there will be such an influx of visitors.

Ways to voice concerns

To the Editor:

I noted with surprise the irritation caused by your failure to publish a report offered by the Rev. M.C. Bradley. It is amazing that a man should live so long and not be aware that it is the editor's privilege to pick and choose, or refuse. I learned that when I was still in high school and ventured to offer my schoolboy wisdom to the world at large. Sometimes I won; sometimes I lost; and though I never kept a log, more were accepted than condemned to the waste-basket.

Once in the town of Exeter I ran unsuccessfully for the school board. I had a message I wished to get to the public and paid for airing my views. If Mr. Bradley's equally eager to air his views, I am sure the Echo editor and he could strike a cash deal.

Thanks for saving purse

To the Editor:

I would like publicly to express my appreciation to one of your residents, Mrs. Claire MacLeod on Blairhampton Rd.

After shopping on a typical busy morning in Haliburton, I left my purse on a bench on the main street.

You can imagine my distress and my subsequent great relief when I returned to town and found the purse had been turned in by the above mentioned.

Looking for Dorset roots

To the Editor:

I have a friend who is over 60 years of age. He knows nothing of his real family, but recently a scrap of information has led our search to the small town of Dorset. It would mean so very much if you could direct this letter to someone in the area who would have recollections of the 1930s and 1940s. The following questions are uppermost in our minds:

We have reason to believe that during the 1930s and 1940s the Rutherfords rented or owned a house in or near Dorset. We feel this family is directly con-

THE SPORT STOP business in Haliburton has been sold to Glen Sharpley, former centre ice star for the Minnesota North Stars and the Chicago Blackhawks of the National Hockey league. He played on the same team with Walt McKechnie when they played for Minnesota. Glen, who will be officially taking over the store on August 30th, will be changing the name of the business to Glen Sharpley's Sport Stop. He wants the customers to know that the 1992 inventory will be arriving daily in time for the Labor Day weekend. We wish to welcome Glen and his wife JoAnne and their two children to Haliburton and we also wish to take this opportunity to wish Bob and Ellen Fyfe all the best as they leave the business.

Congratulations to the tennis team of Gary Brohman and Frank Wallace who remain undefeated in local tennis play. While their winnings have been substantial their competition has not. In fact they're wondering if there is anyone who can seriously challenge their court supremacy.

Last week we said goodbye to Rev. Jim Crighton, his wife Sheryl and their four children, as they began their journey to his new parish in Ottawa. We will really miss them. Right from the first day he arrived in town Jim Crighton was his own man. "He was the right man for the times, I believe God placed him here for a purpose," said Dorothy Way and she said she will always remember his excellent leadership. I personally found Rev. Jim to be not only a minister but a personal friend as well. He was blessed with a great sense of humour and many times whether it be at the men's bible study, at the post office, or at Kozy Korner over a coffee, this humour would come out whether we were talking religion, politics, sports or what have you. He carried this humour into the church and his sermons were always good and his knowledge of the bible put him in a class by himself. I personally want to wish Jim and his family all the best in the city of Ottawa.

The last time that Bernard Sisson and his friend Neil Reynolds went out fishing they hit pay dirt. Neil caught a 20.28 pound brown trout and Bernard landed a 29.70 pound chinook salmon.

Don't let anyone tell you that the tourist season isn't just about over after August 15th. There are still a few people around, but there's plenty of parking spaces vacant at anytime, day or night, especially this year when the recession has ended the tourist season before it even got started. It's a very short season and it seems to be getting shorter all the time. Some of these fly-by-nighters who come in and only open up for a few weeks during the summer season will find money hard to come by. If people want to open up a business why don't they get into business and operate twelve months of the year. During the past years when business was poor during the summer we could always blame it on the weather. This year we can't. The weather has been wonderful.

When I was out at the Haliburton dump the other day (or I guess we call it the landfill site) I noticed that the recycling bins were starting to overflow. It's certainly time that they were emptied. A friend of mine was telling me that he was out at the West Guilford dump one day last week and was surprised to see things in such a deplorable condition. He was telling me that all of the recycling bins were overflowing onto the ground making quite a mess. The boys from Muskoka had better get down here and take this stuff away.

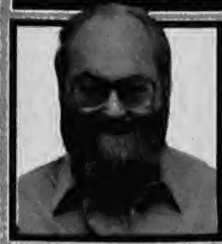

Interest in minor hockey in the Haliburton area could be running high this coming winter due to the fact that a hockey school operated by Ted Glendinning will be in action this week at the arena in Haliburton.

A thank you should go out to the members of the local council for repairing and re-paving the rough spot when you leave Highway 121 going into the Industrial Park Road. In the past you really had to slow down here to miss the many potholes at the entrance way into the Industrial park.

A few leftover notes . . . Congratulations to Don and Shiela Popple of Haliburton who celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary on August 13th . . . We are happy to report that Gerald Dawson has been able to return home following a stay at the Haliburton Hospital . . . Eva and Jack MacKay of London, Ontario were renewing old acquaintances in the village last week . . . Don and Karen Dunsmore and family who have been vacationing in Haliburton for the summer months have returned to their home in Montreal, Quebec . . . We are sorry to report that Stan Dawson is a patient at the Haliburton Hospital following a heart attack.

THERE IS A GASOLINE COMMERCIAL on television these days that really gets to my wife and me. It's the one where they show a beautiful glider flying along above a car on the ground.

To us, it is a sport with a certain, but reasonably controllable amount of danger. It compares in no way with parachuting or the current bungie-jumping craze, but at our ages, it was impulsive risk-taking that ranked right up there with our trip down the Grand Canyon by muleback...

We had flown out to Phoenix, Arizona ten or eleven years ago on one of the rare winter vacations we didn't spend in Haliburton during those city years. (As I recall, it was a poor year for snowmobiling).

On a rambling drive north of town I started spotting signs for a Soaring School, and knowing how my wife had always said she would love to try it, I quietly followed the signs to the sailport.

When I got there, I suggested that I go in and see what it would cost, and Ethel said "sure," confident that it would be too much. So she was more than a little surprised when I said it was only twenty-five bucks — and I'd bought an 'introductory lesson' for her.

I think she might have chickened out if I hadn't told her it was not returnable, but she was game. Then she turned the tables: she wanted me to go up at the same time to take her picture, so she could show it to our children...

So arrangements were made, with my flight to follow hers by just a few minutes. The particular gliders weren't as nifty as the one in the commercial, but the experience certainly was.

The sailplanes are connected to a towplane by a rope, and since the former only has one center wheel, someone has to guide the wingtip for the takeoff.

Students like us sit in the front seat of two-seater craft, and once you reach a certain height, the instructing pilot in the rear seat leans forward and taps you on the shoulder, which is the signal to pull a big, red knob in front of you.

When you give it a tug, the tow rope disconnects, and the towplane falls away to the left as you soar silently away up and to the right. And that's when you notice the real difference in this kind of flying.

The instructor can speak to you in a normal voice: there is no sound except a little wind noise. It is quite a sensation. (Later, when we had dipped down a bit, we could actually hear people talking on the ground).

The arid Arizona desert is ideal for creating the updrafts that the gliders need, and the pilot explained that we were travelling up a 'thermal,' one he located by watch a hawk sailing above without moving its wings.

We kept circling upwards until the hawk had to fly away, and then he started moving down into range of my wife's craft so I could try some photos with my long lens. Frankly, it wasn't that easy to keep the range, and the shots turned out to be somewhat fuzzy.

(But you could tell it was my wife, and our children were suitably impressed with mother's 'flying lesson' — so much so that I had to point out that father was up there, too, or they wouldn't have had even a fuzzy picture to record the event!)

We continued soaring, taking the controls and each of us flying our glider for most of 45 minutes, staying up by using the thermals for climbing.

My pilot told me they stay up for hours at a time when they go on competitive flights, travelling miles in contests, taking polaroid photos of specific buildings in towns twenty or thirty miles apart.

My wife still has her Official Pilot's Logbook, which records the date, time and duration of her first 'lesson,' and I suppose mine is around somewhere. Much as we were both thrilled by it all, though, I don't imagine we're likely to go back for our second lesson now.

But we both get a lot more mileage in our imaginations out of that gasoline commercial than the guy in the car ever will!

SHE ALWAYS TRIED to get there early. That way she could pick a good spot for her boat and a good spot for herself on the beach. She also wanted to work on her tan and a full day of sun would do wonders. Growing into her teens had made her more aware of certain things, such as a great tan being important for summer well-being. Over the past few years she had watched with hooded eyes those young women her own age with bronzed limbs and boyfriends by the score clustered around. The two — bronzed limbs and boyfriends, seemed to go together. You needed the first in order to get the second.

Of course, a big flashy boat was an asset. Guys liked these and would ask questions about the motor and speed. Even if she was able to answer their queries, for let's face it, the boat was her father's, not her's, but even if she could carry on an intelligent conversation about torque and whatever, they soon lost interest and wandered away to some tanned female down the beach. A white body against an impressive, colourful boat, only looked more white.

So a tan was important. And since she hadn't been able to find a job this summer, she could devote a great deal of time and effort to browning herself. She was determined to come to the regatta this year looking and feeling like a 'California Girl'. That ought to make them stand up and take notice.

After making sure the boat was pulled far enough onto the beach that it couldn't float free later, she picked up her new beach towel — no ratty old piece of terrycloth this year — the bottle of tanning oil and her bag with lipstick and other essentials and claimed centre stage.

Most of the regatta activities centered around the lake. There would be lots of boat races, for this was in the era of cheap gas; swimming contests to suit all ages and of course, the skiing competitions. Harry Brown always acted as M.C. and sat on the back of a pickup, microphone in hand. His spot was front row centre on the beach so she parked her towel in the sand right in front of Harry's spot. If she was going to spend the day at the regatta she might as well be where she could see and be seen.

It was obvious, as she looked around, that people were just starting to arrive. The Johnson's with their six children were piling out of the station wagon, picnic baskets and folding chairs in the parent's arms, beach balls, plastic shovels and pails in the kids'. Their dog Muffy strained on a leash held by the eldest Johnson son. Muffy would be tied near the family in the shade of a birch tree and the dog would bark at every person walking within fifteen feet of its family. Some things never change, she thought watching the entourage slowly move toward their usual place on the beach.

The food tables were still being set up. Coleman stoves with big pots of boiling water would later produce the best hot dogs and corn on the cob to be found on the lake that day. Bottles of pop in big metal washbubs choked with ice waited in the shade, their tops covered with newspaper.

More people were arriving now. The ski crowd zoomed up in several sleek boats. They did everything together and possessed almost identical smooth lean bodies the colour of cocoa. She hated them all. It wasn't just their tans she hated. She hated their one dimensional personalities that none-the-less guaranteed them social success year after year on the lake. Skiing was all they did, all day, every day and their friends were exactly the same.

Even their parents were much the same, having been part of the ski crowd when they were younger. Now they drove the boats or watched from shore, tall drinks in hand as they continued to soak up the sun. Her own parents had never skied. Her mother worked in the garden and her father was always busy building a dock or new outhouse. They had farmer tans, not full body brownness.

But if she had been really honest she would have had to admit she was simply jealous of the ski crowd. Their smooth self-confidence, their physical superiority, their air of money and the expensive toys that money can bring: she envied all these even while she knew it was superficial to do so. And had they suddenly turned their attention to her, invited her to join them for a swing around the lake, she would have probably abandoned everything at that instant and gone with them. But she knew that would never happen. However, she could at least acquire the tan.

Now the beach was full and she was glad to have staked out her territory early. Kids ran by sending sand flying. It stuck to her oiled skin, feeling gritty. The speakers mounted on the pickup behind her blared out Harry's announcements but she put up with it, feeling to be somehow part of the spotlight. Everyone had to walk by her to get near Harry and it was fun seeing the varied sizes, shapes and shades of the partially clad bodies on the beach.

There was the usual array of middle-age men and women wearing embarrassingly small bathing suits, trying to hang on to their youth as long as possible. The gawky boys, self-consciously on the verge of adolescence were sneaking looks at the suddenly rounder, made-up girls who were their own age but seemed much older. Younger children, their chests heaving with exertion, marched by proudly displaying their ribbons and trophies. Around all these people, the smell of tanning oil, hot dogs, mustard and butter mixed with a cool moist breeze off the lake.

Sam strolled by her towel and stopped to chat. For the last three summers Sam had tried to get a romance going with her but without success. He had red hair and did not tan. He worked at the store out on the highway and was not her idea of a romantic figure. But Sam was the only male her age to stop and talk. The others were neighbours on the lake, mothers with babies, friends of her parents. The ski crowd were busy with their skis and each other.

By five o'clock, the regatta was winding down and people started to pack up. She had been a little disappointed that no one had remarked on her tan but then after today, she was certain she's as dark as anyone. Maybe she should try lightening her hair, to go with this new, golden-girl persona. It was certainly food for thought.

She noticed a tingling along her shoulders as she gathered her things together and placed them in the boat. As she pushed the boat away from shore and hopped in, Sam slipped by in his runabout. "Nice sunburn," he shouted, pointing to her back. She could have died. It would probably all peel off within a week.

Lining up for the tooth doctor

NORTHERN LIGHTS

VIRGINIA MUENZEL

THERE COMES A TIME (often in the midst of eating a bowl of popcorn) when a person realizes that something needs to be done. That it's time for a change. Progress.

Do you realize that the Village of Haliburton has evolved to a six doctor town? In summer there are usually two or three more brought in. But when your tooth loses a filling to a popcorn kernel, and the pain sears through your jaw, it will quickly dawn on you that we still only have one dentist.

If you've lined up your twice annual appointments to have the plaque removed and the occasional x-ray taken, you may not feel concern. But if you've just moved into Haliburton from Vancouver, and you've been aware that there is a place in your mouth that reacts to hot coffee or iced tea, you might become a bit nervous when you discover it's impossible to get an appointment before sometime in November.

After all, one dentist can only repair so many teeth. Dentists need holidays like everyone else. How many garlic flavoured, tongue flapping, cavernous mouths can a person deal with before he feels a strong urge to stand atop a mountain, overlooking a panoramic view? Even dentists occasionally long to sit on the beach, inhaling sweet ocean scents, listening to breakers instead of small, whining drills. Besides, unless the dentist is one of those rare individuals with an iron constitution, sooner or later he will at least get the flu.

So somewhere between two weeks and a month out of the year, Haliburton is apt to have no dentist. No one will answer the phone. Panic will prevail. Moans will issue forth. People will eg their doctors for relief.

Years ago, the old timers will remember that there was no dentist in the county. Before the days of x-rays and root canals, an offending tooth was simply yanked out by the local doctor. (Maybe without the benefit of novocaine.)

That was long ago, and no, thank goodness, dentists aren't so quick to pull a tooth. Soothing music, and better equipment make the whole, once tension-fraught process of repair work easier to bear. We are encouraged to save our teeth. There are actually children walking around who've never had a cavity.

But Haliburton is growing. The Minden dentist surely has all he can handle. That leaves Lindsay, Peterborough or Toronto. I had to see a dentist in Toronto once. It cost me $10 to park the car.

Somewhere in the city, there must be a dentist who is tired of the rat race, the high cost of parking, the lack of a view, the noise. Maybe we could place an ad that would lure this kindly, skilled person to our lovely town. Perhaps there's some suitable office space overlooking head Lake and the park. Surely that person will appreciate all we have to offer. The art, theater, concerts. The curling, racketball, health spa. The growing abundance of dental patients anxious to have healthy, well cared for teeth. The chance to quadruple the caseload in the summer.

Maybe we'd do well to leave that last one out.

Scrutinizing every wish list

TAX WATCH

by: GARY KENNEY & JOHN BEACHLI

THE PLAN has three parts. First we are working toward a public meeting at 8 p.m., Fri., Sept. 6, in the Haliburton Village Legion Hall. We need you there. All of you.

When you attend you will not be issued a beret, Rambo knife, or Uzi machine pistol. When you come you will notice hundreds of people, neighbours, just like you. Some will be NDP supporters, others will have voted PC or Grit in past elections. All there will have one common bond: a sincere appreciation for the responsibilities of taxpayers to support the needs of our community, and just as sincere a hope that the responsibilities of taxpayers can be promoted in the November elections.

George Lansens will be flying in from Blenheim, Ontario. He will talk about his efforts, and success, as the first Ontario taxpayer to make a municipal council spend according to what is reasonably available in taxes, not what is needed to buy every item on every wish-list.

By the end of the meeting we will have your ideas for the next step: The November elections.

Every taxpayer is also a voter. If we do not want school and municipal tax increases to double the rate of inflation as they have in 1991, the ballot box must send that message. We can make sure every candidate states clearly his/her intentions, but only you can make sure, with two strokes of a pencil, that you are heard.

Finally, we intend to be there after the elections too. Taxpayers need changes in how budgets are announced, how background information is made available, and how tax increases are debated, and voted on by trustees and elected officials. Until those changes are made, Tax Watch will watch.

For the next 12 weeks you will be phoned, handed posters, and reminded repeatedly of your rights as a taxpayer. The buck is being passed to you.

Kayakers flock to Gull for World Cup races

by SUSAN CAMPBELL
Staff Reporter

To a roaring river, white water kayakers will flock. And this will certainly be the case when the world's best kayakers meet at the Minden White Water Reserve this weekend to take on the fury of the Gull River.

"When you have a challenging river, it raises the standards of competition and makes you want to get out there and do your run even more," says 24-year-old David Ford of Edmonton about the Minden slalom course.

Ford recently won a bronze for his kayaking skills at the second leg of the World Cup White Water Slalom in Germany in July. This is Canada's first medal in the sport, although the 12-member team is gearing up for success at the races in Minden on the weekend.

"Most of the team, from Ontario at least, has grown up on this river, so there will be a home advantage in a sense," says national team coach Mike Druce.

There will be 120 athletes representing 17 countries in the 600-metre and kayak slalom race on August 24 and 25. Competitors will be travelling from as far away as Austria, Australia, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Great Britain, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, New Zealand, Sweden, Switzerland, United States, Poland, Yugoslavia, Holland and Latvia.

There are five legs to the World Cup, each held in different countries throughout the summer. Each scores his or her own spot on the national team by reaching a set of standards set by the Canadian Olympic Association based on the scores at the World Cup events.

Scores in kayaking are measured by paddling from the start to the finish of a half-mile championship race course without any mistakes in the shortest possible time. Competitors are penalized for missing or touching any of the 25 to 30 gates along the course.

If the poles on the course are green and white the racer will attack a gate going downstream, but if the poles are red and white, he or she will approach the gate from upstream.

The gates are placed in such a way as to test a paddler's ability to control his or her boat as well as to demonstrate skill in maneuvering in the rapids. Racers cannot rest between gates and they must paddle constantly, arriving at the finish line right side up.

"Canada's participation in terms of the racing side of the sport is still quite small compared to Europe, but it's picking up," says Coach Druce.

The sport of kayaking has not received much media attention or public recognition in Canada as yet, and grants from Sport Canada are only $400 a month for nine members on the Canadian kayaking team.

This hardly pays for their trips across Canada and to Europe for competitions, let alone daily expenses while they train. Many of the athletes have part-time jobs, pick up jobs in the winter, or rely on parental support throughout much of the year.

It is just recently that prize money has been awarded in the sport, although most advertisers are looking for athletes with higher profiles in more popular sports to endorse their products.

"All over Canada there are great places to do the sport," says Ford. "When people see it in the Olympic Games that will help [publicize] the sport a lot." The white water slalom specialty has not been held since the Munich Games in 1972, but it will be resurrected in Barcelona, Spain in 1992.

After the World Cup competition in Minden, the final leg will be held in Wisconsin on Labour Day weekend.

So be sure to head to the Minden White Water Reserve this weekend to support Canadian athletes and enjoy the beautiful scenery and the finesse involved in the sport of white water slalom kayaking. For more information call (613)225-4906.

West Guilford's Dogpatch hosted the third annual mixed lob ball tournament on the weekend — and walked away with the championship after it beat the Toronto Benders 8-7 in Sunday action.

Second place among the 12 teams went to Toronto's Party Packs, which beat Minden's Empty Coolers 7-6. Above, players enjoy the games while Cheryl Cooper, left, takes a turn at bat & Andrea Donaldson plays with a player-to-be, Derek Carpenter

Indians proud of first season

The Haliburton Indians entered into play in their league playoff tournament, hosted by the Huntsville Reynolds Sheet Metal ball team. The tournament, designed to guarantee each club plenty of action, involved round robin play with the best overall record claiming the championship title.

The Indians first competition pitted them against a tough Gravenhurst club, who narrowly edged the Indians in their last meeting. However, the Indians combined strong pitching and an air tight defence with timely hitting to produce a solid 9 to 6 victory. The game featured contributions down the lineup from led off batter to last, both offensively and defensively. Most valuable player went to Mike Craigen on the strength of this work behind the plate.

The next engagement for the Indians was the host team. These two teams have provided much entertaining action for their supporters whenever they hook up. This game would be no different as double digit scoring is commonplace and the basepaths become a racetrack. After the dust settled, Huntsville had emerged victorious, hanging on for a 21 to 19 win. The Indians had rallied from a 21 to 12 deficit in the last inning, to score seven runs and leave the bases full with the too of the batting order batting. Most valuable player went to Ryan O'Neill who put on a batting clinic for both teams.

With their record squared at one win and one loss the Indians final game came against an undefeated Bracebridge team with two wins. The Indians realized if they could hand Bracebridge their first loss of the tourney they would invariably capture the Muskoka League Championship. Batting in the top of the first, Mike Morissette lit up the Bracebridge pitcher for a two-run homer quieting the opposition while sending his Indian teammates into a jubilant celebration. At the end of the first inning the opposition managed to knot the game to two.

At this point the game started to slip out of the Indians' grasp as the Bracebridge bats came alive putting up 10 runs over the next two innings as compared to a single run for the Haliburton Indians. Final score Bracebridge 15 Indians 6, with Bracebridge capturing the title.

However, despite the loss, the Indians captured second place based on the strength of their record and the series of tie breakers used to determine standings.

Claiming runner up status in the first year of the Muskoka Tyke Baseball League is an incredible accomplishment for the Indian players. This is a first-time endeavour for Haliburton County which can be built upon with the framework now in place. Upon close examination of the 13 players who made up the Indian squad, four players are underage, and five were first-year players competing against centres that could field nine second year players at any given time and carried no underage talent. At the end of the season the four team league became closer in their competitiveness with each other.

At this point the Indian players and management would like to acknowledge the Haliburton Legion Branch 129 and the Haliburton Rotary Club for their financial assistance and to the parents of these young players for their commitment to bring baseball into our area and their households.

Terry Fox Run September 15

Sunday September 15, marks The 11th Annual Terry Fox Run for Cancer Research. An anticipated 150,000 people will participate at Run sites across Ontario to raise funds for innovative projects seeking cures for all cancers.

People of all ages can run, walk, bike or roller-blade any of the ten kilometre courses set up at 500 sites around the province. If someone is unable to participate in the Run they can sponsor a participant or simply use a pledge sheet to send in a donation.

Funds raised by The Terry Fox Run are administered by the National Cancer Institute of Canada and are allocated to specific innovative cancer research projects. In Canada these projects have benefitted from over $90-million raised by The Marathon of Hope and The Terry Fox Run.

The local organizer is Mike Irwin, 457-1641. The Haliburton run starts from the Government Dock at Head Lake. Registration is from 2-4 p.m.

Something can save the planet: You!

We created—and can solve—crisis

by MEREDITH RHODES

Environmental Youth Corps participant

A HEALTHY ENVIRONMENT depends on us all. We are all responsible for the protection of our natural resources and the health of the environment. Through the Ontario government's Environmental Youth Corps, employers and young people can take on that responsibility together.

This is my first summer as an Environmental Youth Corps environmentalist. I'm attending Trent University for environmental studies. As an EYC student, I have had the rewarding opportunity to learn about key environmental problems, and get first-hand experience in solving them. It also gave me the chance to work with others who are just as concerned about the environment.

I have been working for the County's Waste Management Coordinator, Len Munt, with the Waste Management Master Plan. Many important and serious issues have been brought to my attention that I had simply not thought of before. Until I actually worked every day with the continuous problems of waste management, I did not realize our enormous crisis. What really disappoints me is that the crisis had been created by us, residents in each community. However, I do have hope that even though we helped create the problem, we can also help solve it.

Something CAN be done. I am not an extreme radical who will save the earth. I'm simply a concerned citizen who tries to help the environment. I try to apply the 3Rs initiatives (Reduce, Reuse, and Recycle) as much as possible. It is surprising how much you can reduce your garbage and save money in just a couple of weeks! It also makes me feel like I am contributing back what I have already taken.

As a cottager, I absolutely love nature and its beautiful surroundings. It is frightening to think that possibly one day our lakes will die, the vegetation will decrease, and even worse, we could be buried in our own garbage!! What will happen then? How can you describe the way things used to be to generations to come? Of course, it scares me and until a young child asked me recently if garbage will soon fall out of the sky, I realized that children today have totally different pressures than when I grew up.

The environment has changed drastically over the years. For example, I may have totally lost my skill (or luck) in fishing, but the number of fish in our lake has certainly declined. I can remember when my Dad and I would go fishing and catch an entire string of fish in about an hour! Now, I'll be lucky to catch two!! Others can come up with numerous other occurrences that have happened to our environment.

My perspective on waste management is pretty grim. It still amazes me that even though we live in an incredibly high-tech, advanced society, one of our major problems is garbage!! If people talked about garbage many years ago like they do today, they would think they were crazy. However, times have changed and we've come a long way. But still, the thought of my children not being able to play in a park, go swimming in a lake, and basically enjoy nature, really depresses me. When future children look back and see a video about the Gulf war and see the vast amount of oil spilt, killing thousands of birds and other animals, do you think they will understand why it happened? If the future includes drinking only bottled water, I feel it will be difficult to explain that we used to drink the water from our taps before we contaminated it, without feeling ashamed.

All the new laws and by-laws for illegal dumping etc. are great, but what took so long? The 3Rs initiatives could have been started years ago making our current problems less intense. Some damage is already done and it's too late to change that but there is the future and it's in OUR hands. So please, participate and give your environment a hand. Take a look around you. Don't you think it's worth it? I sure do.

Snakes are our friends

by MINISTRY OF NATURAL RESOURCES

Have you ever been startled by the sudden appearance of a sneaky, slithering snake while working in the back yard? Don't take your rake to this beautiful creature as it may be instrumental with pest control around your house.

"Depending upon the species, snakes will eat a variety of animals which may become pests around your cottage," says Tim Haxton, a biologist with the Ministry of Natural Resources in Minden.

In Ontario, 15 species of snakes can be found, one of which, the Massasauga Rattlesnake, is venomous but can only be found near the Great Lakes. Of the remaining 14 species, nine of which are indigenous to Minden District, all are considered harmless.

The species found in Minden District eat a variety of food from the insect eating smooth green snake, slug and worm eating red-bellied snake and brown snake, amphibian eating eastern ribbonsnake, eastern garter snake, hognose snake, ringneck snake and northern water snake, to the all and important rodent eating milk snake. These snakes are often victimized by serpent-loathing property owners, throwing off the ecological balance in the garden.

Haxton says "The worst you can get from the snakes found in this area is a microbial infection as a result of a bite."

Only two species, the northern water snake and the eastern milk snake will have the tendency to strike when threatened. The eastern hognose has a unique defence mechanism imitating a cobra by flattening its head and vibrating its tail. The eastern milk snakes also vibrates its tail often leading to misidentification and their untimely demise. Failing to ward off the threat, the hognose will enter into an academy award winning performance of an agonizing death eventually rolling on its back and playing dead. If turned right side up, the hognose would just roll back over.

Anyone wishing to comment is encouraged to write or call the Ministry of Natural Resources, Minden, Ontario K0M 2K0 705-286-1521.

Stanhope nixes idea of a covered bridge

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

The following are brief reports of items discussed at Wednesday's Stanhope council meeting.

New computer

The Ministry of Housing will grant $5,000 towards the purchase of a computer for the municipality's building department. It's hoped the computer, which should have the capability to store vital information on each property in the municipality, will be compatible with other county computers.

3Rs awareness

Council agreed to support a public awareness campaign to promote the three Rs — reduce, reuse and recycle. Brochures will be left with local landfill attendants to be handed out to those requiring information on better waste management. Len Munt, co-ordinator of the county's waste management master plan, is spearheading the campaign. If enough interest is shown, Munt hopes a seminar can be organized for landfill attendants to improve their public relations skills. Stanhope is the fifth municipality to offer its support after Lutterworth, Snowdon, Dysart et al and Bicroft.

Covered bridge

Neighbours' complaints and construction complexities have squashed plans to replace the St. Peter's Bridge with a covered bridge. In July, a Minden company suggested the idea and council agreed in principle. Neighbours are worried a covered bridge would be too high and would block the view of neighbouring St. Peter's Church. "I'm against it. St. Peter's Church is one the most attractive tourist attractions in the county," said Reeve Harry Davis.

A representative of the engineering firm contracted for the new bridge's construction said a cover would be costly and require an extensive amount of work. "We consider Stanhope paying for a cover not entirely necessary," said Ian McCallum of Triton Engineering. McCallum estimates it will cost $16,000 to test the present bridge to determine if proper footings exist. Initial tests at the south end of the bridge indicate a suitable bedrock base 12 feet down. But at the north end, costs of testing have risen steadily when it was discovered bedrock footings are present at least 35 feet below the surface. Bore holes may have to be dug to affirm they exist, which could cost $10,000.

"The bottom line is we have to have a new bridge," said Councillor Eleanor Harrison, who reminded McCallum of the tight budget. To cover the costs, Stanhope will apply for a Ministry of Transportation subsidy.

Wood chipper

A Bancroft company has offered to clear scrub brush from landfills. Using a special wood chipper, Clark-Kavanagh Homes has offered to clear the sites for $65 an hour starting in September. As an added bonus, the company has offered a full day demonstration of their wood chipper at half price. Council agreed to consider their offer.

PUTTING THEIR BEST FOOT FORWARD: More than 90 dancers took over the West Guilford Community Centre on Thursday to attend a line dancing workshop, sponsored by Haliburton County Home Support Services.

Dancers show off their legs at all-day workshop

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

PIVOT TURN CLOSE and a cha cha cha... you're almost half-way through, almost. You still have to worry about the side close side, rock and recover part. But once you have it down, congratulations — you've mastered the two basic steps to Whose Got The Paper?, one of many intricate dances in the complicated world of line dancing.

"This isn't an easy dance, so let me walk it for you once," shouts Dorothy Milne, one of Haliburton's finest line dance instructors. Perched high atop a wooden platform in the West Guilford Community Centre, Mrs. Milne towers above the sea of line dancers who came to learn a few new steps at Thursday's all-day workshop.

Sponsored by Haliburton County Home Support Services, over 90 dancers took to the floor to strut their stuff. Expert instruction was provided by a variety of dance teachers, including Bunny Burton, a cottager who graciously volunteered her services.

Wearing a wireless microphone, Mrs. Burton barked out dance commands in boot camp fashion to the beat of the music, which was operated by husband Bruce. "I don't even have this much power over my own grandchildren," joked Mrs. Burton, amidst her attempts to lead the group in what she called "a simple California soft-shoe".

The dancers, some dressed in gym clothes and headbands, never took their eyes off their teacher. And once the music kicked in, many managed to grasp the moves immediately, while others took a little longer.

Finally, after a few rough starts the group began performing in unison, moving smoothly and effortlessly across the floor. And when the finale was reached, the smiles among the sweaty brows of the exhausted dancers was a sure sign Mrs. Burton's efforts hadn't been wasted.

But that was just the first dance. The day was still young and there was much more hoofing to be done — much more.

Saturday's baseball marriage safe on first widow, Ms. Weir decided early on that "if you can't beat the guys, join them if you want to spend time with them." Hockey, football or soccer don't have mixed leagues, so lob ball seemed the ideal answer.

"Joe wanted to get married this summer and I said the only way we'd be able to (find the time) is at a ball diamond," Ms. Weir says. All their friends are already there, so why not? (Best man Ken Ogden is on the same team and bridesmaid Lynne Boyko is the top cheerleader.)

When word of their plans spread, the most frequent comment was "You're getting married where?" West Guilford seemed a natural choice because they've played in tourney before, the people all seemed nice and the setting was beautiful.

There were even a few coincidences to prove they had made the right decision. Through Wedding Services in Toronto, they were put in contact with Rev. Al McNally, who happens to be the uncle of Greg Cooper, one of the tournament organizers.

As well, the newlyweds' team is sponsored by Bender's O'Toole's at Kennedy and Ellesmere.

O'Toole's was co-founded by Grey Sisson, who went to school a baseball throw away from the marriage diamond. Grey Sisson is one of the Guilford Sissons, and has probably played numerous times on the same field.

Although this was the third mixed tournament at West Guilford, it was the first time anyone had been married during it, and the wedding became quite a novelty among 12 teams, many of whom stayed through the rain to witness the event.

The couple is now residing and playing baseball in Scarborough.

Bound for Spain:

Minden teen busy with last minute plans to make most of the adventure

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

SEPTEMBER HAS ALWAYS BEEN the time for change. Younger students move up a grade and high school seniors move on to become college and university freshmen. And if anticipation is running high for these students moving to another part of the province, imagine what it would be like if you had to leave the country? Dustin Davis doesn't have to, because on September 4, the 18-year-old Minden Rotary exchange student is heading for Spain.

"I think I'll get by and pick up the language fairly quickly," says the Grade 12 high school student in the kitchen of his family's farmhouse between Minden and Haliburton.

"My Rotary family speaks fairly good English and I'm sure they'll tide me over until I feel comfortable enough to switch."

Davis's new "family" lives in Zaragoza, a city of 600,000 in northeastern Spain. For a year, the 18-year-old Haliburton County native will become totally immersed in the Spanish way of life. He will also attend school with one of his host family's children. But don't ask him what level he will be taking because Davis isn't sure.

"I'm just trying to figure out what all this means," he says, pouring over a vague official letter he received from Spain. Davis believes he will attend first year university, which he's convinced will be a major asset when he returns to OAC at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School in the fall of 1992.

Although by the time he returns most of his friends will have moved on, Davis feels he has made the best choice. "I am losing that last year with my friends, but I'm gaining a lot more than I'm losing. Besides, if they're good friends, they'll remain good friends."

One thing he is sure to gain is a working knowledge of Spanish. This was one of the reasons he picked Spain. "Spanish is such a practical language. It's the third largest in world."

But initially, Davis had other plans. "My first three choices were Belgium, France and Austria. Basically I wanted to learn French and thought it would be useful when I came back." Unfortunately he was rejected because he was just over 18. "Some countries are more sticky about age than others."

Three new choices were required and Davis went for Finland, Spain and Brazil. The latter was full and Finland was too close to the Canadian way of life, leaving Spain as the more exotic choice. But Davis is honest and admits just moving to a large city is exotic enough.

"Just going to live in Toronto for a year would be a cultural change for me," he says, adding it will also be strange living in a climate that's warm all year round. "I'll miss downhill skiing. But I'm in the north part of Spain, so maybe I'll end up in Alps."

Near the end of July, Davis expects to travel to Barcelona, 90 minutes east of Zaragoza, to attend the 1992 Summer Olympics. "Since my exchange will be done in late June, I'll probably buy a EuroRail pass and do the big tour," he says, although at this point he isn't sure of any future plans. Whatever date he picks, it won't be soon enough for mom and dad.

"My parents think it's a good experience for me. They'll miss me, but I'll be back in a year."

"My parents think it's a good experience for me. They'll miss me, but I'll be back in a year," says Rotary Exchange student Dustin Davis on spending the next 12 months in Spain.

The Depression lives on ...

... in people such as Clarke MacDonald, the former moderator of the United Church. His views, his political activism and his faith was forged during this decade of profound hardship

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

SIXTY YEARS FROM NOW, the recession of 1990-91 will be but a blip on Canadian history. People will remember the disturbances it caused in their lives, but in no way will it have shaped a generation's view of their world and their humanity.

Sixty years after the Great Depression, however, this pivotal era hangs in the air like some invisible force still guiding the actions and thoughts of those who lived through it. Europeans may debate the moral and ethical confrontations of World War II ("What did you do when a Jewish family knocked on your door?"); Canadians face a future without the leadership of a generation which lived side by side in poverty, strengthening their resolve "to do those things which ought to be done."

Leftists of today are generally anti-establishment, one of those establishments being the church. During the Depression, the church provided Canada with some of its fiercest and most saint-like crusaders for social justice and equality. It's no coincidence that many of the founders of the Cooperative Commonwealth Confederation leading members of the United Church, a very Canadian denomination which was born in the midst of the nation's intellectual coming of age.

Clarke MacDonald's very being is steeped in those years. He wears the experiences of the Depression and his unwavering faith in God like a comfortable old sweater, an old friend. A second skin almost.

"I read Pierre Berton's The Great Depression and it was depressing, but everything he describes was so true," says the Highlands cottager and former moderator of the United Church who was born in 1920 on a farm in Green Hill, Nova Scotia. "The Depression made life more difficult but I don't regret that because it taught me how to make

Now that Muriel and Clarke MacDonald have retired, they're able to spend more time enjoying the beauties of the Highlands at their cottage

'The Depression made life more difficult but I don't regret that because it taught me how to do,' says Mr. McDonald. This is his first car and young Clarke, right, would lend it out for favours in return.

do, and I'm glad."

The widespread poverty and the resulting deprivations of body and soul were a catalyst for a political awakening, especially among Christians who took to heart Jesus's ministrations to the poor.

When he was nine, young Clarke met Monseigneur M.M. Coady, founder of the Cooperative Credit Union, otherwise called the Antigonish Movement. "That was the first time I knew there was such a thing as injustice. He spoke of how the merchant class was robbing people of their just due. Here was this man, 6' 4", 200 pounds, athletic, a macho man. I looked up to him. It was the start of my interest in issues."

"My father, George, who I know voted Tory every election in his life, became a pioneer in the movement. I saw this as a practical expression of his religion. Dad never expressed a philosophy with which he raised his four sons and a daughter, but if he did, it would be 'I hope you don't drink and I hope you don't steal, but God help you if you're lazy.' Work was a virtue for him, it was morally superior. The best thing you could say about a young man was that he was a good worker."

Men couldn't work during the Depression, however, because there were no jobs. Unemployment was stealing from them a sense of dignity and, in George MacDonald's terms, a sense of manhood.

One day, young Clarke was playing in the yard when three men walked by. They were hoboes, men who rode the rails searching for jobs.

"Would you do something for us?" they asked Clarke. "Would you ask your mother if she could give us a lunch. We'd pay her for it."

Visions of a nickel as his reward prompted Clarke to run indoors and convey the request to his mother, who willingly prepared the heartily enjoyed lunch. When they offered to pay her, Estella MacDonald brushed their offer aside. "I was bitterly disappointed I was losing my nickel," her son remembers. "I asked her 'How come you didn't accept their money?' 'Look,' she said, 'I have four boys and I never know when they might be on the road looking for a meal.'"

Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

(When World War II broke out, Mr. MacDonald notes, "those hoboes became heroes overnight. A country which just days before couldn't provide them with adequate food and clothing, overnight just gave them those things. I saw this as being incongruous and wrong.")

Faith in the MacDonald home was something you lived.

"My parents were just the one word, wonderful. Mother was somewhat pietistic, devotional, spiritual and extremely practical at the same time. In those days, the church and school were central in the community, as a way of life, not just as buildings. You'd also gathered at the homes of neighbours on a winter Sunday evening and there'd be a hymn sing. Religion became a part of your language and life. It was there all the time in one form or another."

"I can remember sermons I heard when I was 12 and the mental pictures I had."

"But you have an unusual memory," laughs his wife, Muriel, who's listening in on the conversation at their cottage. "My parents' home became a haven for student ministers who could come for a weekend," he continues. "Their sermons had a tremendous influence on me and I used to go home thinking about what they said. One Sunday it was about the Sixth Chapter of Isaiah, where he goes into the temple. 'With twain [two of the seraphim's wings] he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet and with twain he did fly.' The minister was Scottish and I thought he said 'With twine he covered his face. . . ' Later that night I was in the barn with my brother feeding the cows. I undid a bale of hay and said [in all seriousness], 'This is the stuff he was covering his face with!'"

Clarke MacDonald has one of those smiles which dances in his eyes, as if it comes from his heart. He's also a very modest, kind and funny man who would have been the same had he stayed in his former Cape Breton parish, instead of becoming a national church leader. (He's chairman of The Observer and although "retired", he's part-time chaplain of Hart House in Toronto, the city where he's been based for most of his ministerial life. On Sunday, he was the guest speaker at Zion United Church's Centennial Service in Carnarvon.)

On the 1982 evening he was elected moderator, a journalist asked him what wing of the United Church he belonged to. "Put me down as a basic, evangelical, liberal activist. Basic because my faith is based on the Bible; evangelical because it's a faith I want to share; liberal in the sense of openness and responsibility; and activist because like John Milton, 'I cannot praise a cloistered and sequestered virtue that's afraid to sally forth.'"

In all its 66-year history, the United Church has never been afraid to sally forth, and indeed has sometimes been pilloried and condemned because of it.

"When people say the church shouldn't be political, they haven't been reading their Bible carefully," says Mr. MacDonald, who's travelled to South Africa to learn what he's protesting about, and camped out on the steps of Litton, a Canadian arms manufacturer. "Isaiah was all the time dabbling in politics. In Isaiah he says 'the bed is shorter than a man can lie in it and the covers are shorter than a man can cover himself with.' In his day, the people were making allowances with other people. They found themselves getting short-changed and couldn't cover themselves. What has Free Trade done to us? We can't lie down comfortably with the people we've shared our bed with."

"...Sin is 'any willful transgression of the expressed will of God.' Sin is also anything that dehumanizes other people. That's why the Crusade was sinful, that's why Saddam Hussein is sinful, that's why the Gulf war was sinful — it dehumanized all those women and children. What is 'collateral damage'? It was mutilating little children's lives."

When faced with injustice, why do some people turn away from God, while others turn to God to fight for betterment of mankind?

Mr. MacDonald has this illustration. "Gordon Sinclair went to India, where he saw pain and deprivation. He said 'There is no God — why would a God allow this?' An 18-year-old woman from Albania — she would become Sister Theresa, then Mother Theresa — also went to India. She said 'God, now that this is here, what can I do about it?'"

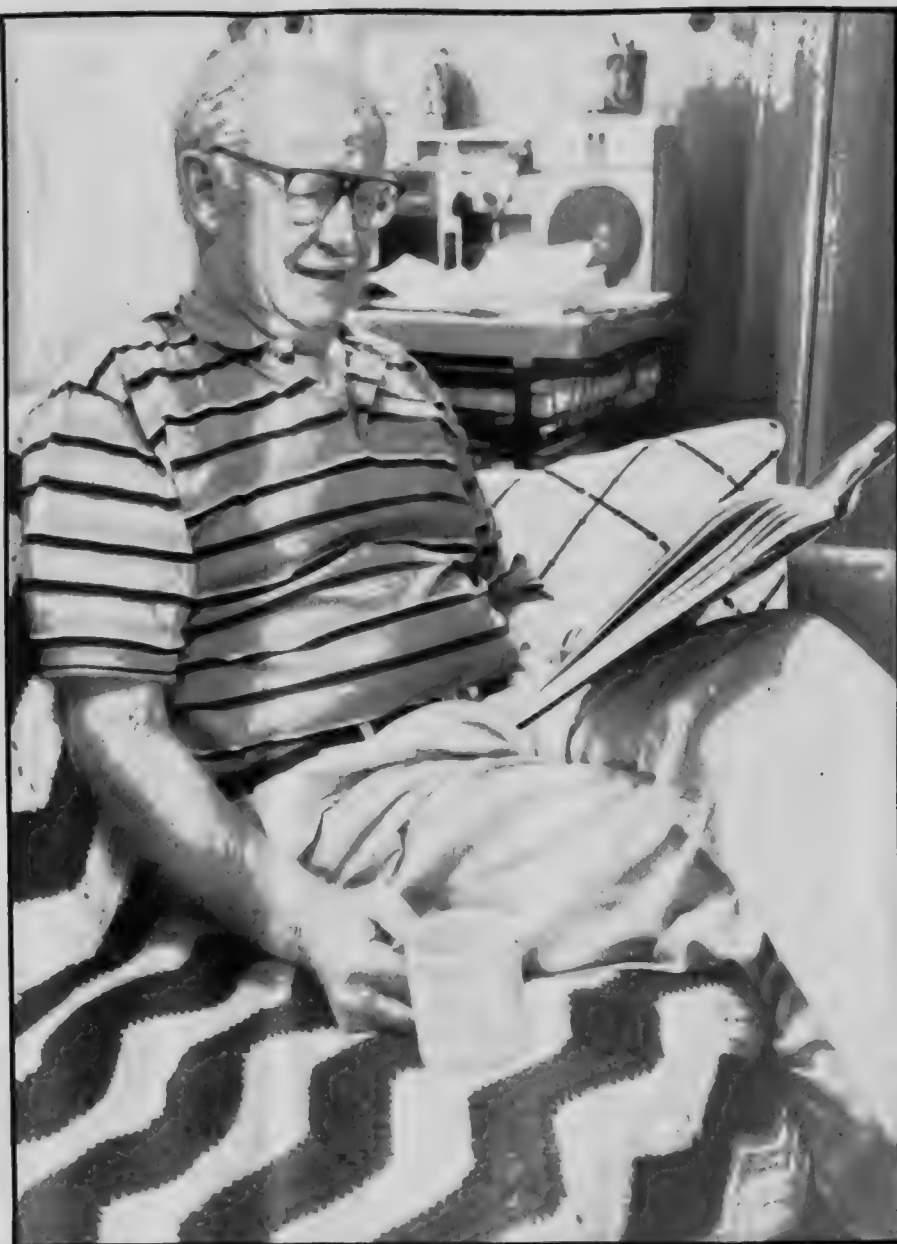

"The agnostic blames God and the second person see that it's the human depravity that brought this about."

"The whole thing finally comes down to what you're committed to. I wouldn't have talked about it this way when I was a younger — too much 'Brother have you been saved?' —, but when I was 14, I quietly joined the church. It was a Saturday night and the church was a community dance hall commanded as a church on Sundays. There were three of us, and while I didn't understand exactly what was happening, I knew I was committing my life to Christ. I knew that whatever direction my life took, that would be my benchmark."

"What does it mean? It means commitment to the things Jesus taught, that He stood for, and more than anything else, the attitude He had to people and events."

"When I was born on the sixth of July, 1920, there were hundreds of others born the same day — black, Chinese, atheist, Hindu. We were all human and that's where we've got to start from."

"When people say the church shouldn't be political they haven't been reading their Bible carefully," says MacDonald; who describes himself as a basic, evangelical, liberal activist.

People say 'Oh, he's a humanist.' I'm a Christian humanist who has got his sense of values from the Gospels.

"Life is like a triangle. God is at the apex. I'm here," he says, pointing to the lower right corner, "my neighbour, be he Muslim or Jewish, is here," he says, pointing to the left corner. "We're both coming up the sides of the triangle towards God, but look — as we move farther up we are closer together until we are one with God. That is the goal. The method of achieving it is vastly different."

"When I was a young student minister pushing my bike across the Prairies, I met four people carrying signs which said 'Flee from the wrath of God', 'Prepare to meet thy maker'. One woman said to me, 'I hear you gave a sermon last night. Were there many people saved?' I said 'I just do the work, I let God keep the books.'"

"... I owe a tremendous amount to my theology teachers (at Dalhousie University and later Pine Hill in Halifax.) Theology is an exciting study and field. Those years delivered me from being a fundamentalist, which I very nearly was. Theology is an analysis of the dogma. It throws a light on it and it asks the questions. It has to keep asking the question why."

"Eli Weissel was only 15 when he was in a concentration camp. He tells the story of a little Dutch boy who was hanged in front of all the people for alleged conspiracy. When he was not yet dead, a man behind Eli asked 'Where's God now?' He asked it three times, and then a voice said 'God is with the child.'"

"That's how God lives with the ambiguity (of sin in the world) and the cross is the proof of that — although Eli Wiessel wouldn't say it that way."

Mr. MacDonald tells another story — he's really good at telling stories; it's a trait he picked up from his parents.

On a visit to London, England, he went to the Speaker's Corner at Hyde Park where he listened to Donald Soper, a preacher who literally got on his soapbox every week. "He said 'Every minister should have a second funnel beside his preaching in the pulpit.' I said, 'Gee, I'd like to be like him.' I was the minister at St. Luke's at Sherborne and Carlton Streets in Toronto, just across from Allan Gardens. On Sunday nights, everyone would gather in the park — communists, fascists, hot gospels. One night, a Prince Edward Islander in my congregation said 'We should be out there.' So it was agreed and the next Sunday night, five or six of the elders and I went there with an old Coke box and a sign that said St. Luke's Forum. A bunch of people gathered around us — 'What sort of act will these people put on?' I talked for three to five minutes and asked if there were any questions. I was afraid no one would have anything to say, but it ended up going on for an hour, an hour and a half. We were never stuck for questions — sometimes I was stuck for answers."

Being all-knowing isn't what faith means to him. "I'm not afraid of people's questions because I don't claim to have the ready-made, absolute answers. People who have the right answers for everything, or believe that everything is black or white, they aren't willing to live with the ambiguities of God."

"If God didn't want it to be ambiguous, he would have made it impossible to sin. He gave us free will. I have to make room for the other person's opinion and defend their right to have that opinion."

"I once encountered a woman who insisted every was black or white. 'Give me the answer to this, a true story, then,' I said. 'In a concentration camp, there is a woman and her teenage daughter. One afternoon a guard comes to the mother and says 'I want you in my quarters tonight' and you know what that meant. 'I won't be there,' she said. 'Then your daughter will be.' So, the mother went that night. She made a compromise with her principles and morals."

"The woman said 'She shouldn't have done it, she should have done what was right and God would have looked after her daughter.' In a concentration camp?"

It's stories like that, and opinions like that, which haven't always endeared Clarke MacDonald to others within the United Church. But in that very sense, he embodies what that church means, and the forces which shaped it back in 1925 when he was a five year old in Pictou County. The Depression politicized a nation, and a faith, leaving a legacy which lives on today.

AT THE ROCK

'When everything else changes this place is sort of the rock,' says Gordon Cressy of Kennisis cottage

by SUSAN CAMPBELL

Staff Reporter

WHEN GORDON CRESSY visited Haliburton County 21 years ago, the cottage he bought was nothing more than a summer shack with plastic bags as windows. Today it is a year-round haven for this busy public figure and his family.

"When everything else changes, this place is sort of the rock for me," he says, relaxing on his porch with a view of a lake and shoreline which could rival that depicted in any fairy tale.

On this morning with the sun shining and the sounds of his children playing in the background, it's hard to imagine the Gordon Cressy who's settling in for another interview will soon be dressed in a business suit, running from meeting to meeting in the city.

"I've always found this is the place for the soul, a place to recharge, reflect and reconnect."

Mr. Cressy bought the four-bedroom cottage along Kennisis Lake Road in 1970 when he was searching for a retreat for the kids he was working with at Opportunity House, a group home in Toronto. Dozens of disadvantaged teens have had the good fortune of returning to nature for a few days at what eventually became the Cressy cottage.

But if social work first brought Mr. Cressy to the Highlands, it is his busy schedule encompassing many other fields which has given him reason to continually escape to the serenity of cottage life.

"I am one who operates in the field of action. . . that's who and what I am," says the 47-year-old vice-president of development at the University of Toronto.

Mr. Cressy's three-week cottage vacation this summer with wife Joanne and sons Joseph and Keith, is a long-awaited reward for the completion of a $100-million fundraising campaign at U of T this year.

"My life has always been about connecting people and institutions," says Mr. Cressy.

As second-in-command to the university's president since 1987, Mr. Cressy is responsible for upholding the image of the institution and keeping abreast of how the university relates to the community and to government. The job also requires a thorough understanding of the city's multicultural, labour and business communities.

"When looking at the image side of the institution, I noticed it was predominantly Anglo-Saxon, and I knew this would have to change to reflect the changing community."

There are 55,000 students and each year the number of foreign students increases.

Mr. Cressy's sensitivity to cultural differences began in his teenage years. When he enrolled in the Business Administration program at Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, he took a political science course with international reporter Bucky Johnson.

This was exciting enough to give him the itch to travel and learn about different cultures. At 19, he arranged to travel with the government-funded organization Canadian University Students Overseas.

In 1963 he headed for Trinidad to spend a year running camps sponsored by the YMCA. He returned to help with the camps in 1965 and 1967, and has been affiliated with both CUSO and the YMCA ever since.

As he sorts through the chronology of his life — which makes a visitor exhausted just listening to it — Mr. Cressy stops to reflect on one of its greatest ironies: 10 years later, he was appointed Chairman of the National Council of the YMCA, and 25 years later, he Chaired the Board of CUSO.

In spite of his own positive experiences in different cultures, it wasn't until he witnessed riots in Chicago while attending George Williams College in the 1960s that Mr. Cressy came face to face with racism: "differences" were the cause of hatred amongst people.

Mr. Cressy was politicized. And one of the most effective ways to fight ignorance was through education and political leadership.

After completing a graduate degree in social work in Toronto, Mr. Cressy served as a school board trustee from 1969 until 1976. In those days, trustees were paid only $3,600 per year, but he survived by teaching sociology part-time at the Ontario Institute of Education.

One of the issues which Mr. Cressy brought to the fore as a trustee was the concept of a "heritage language". If there were enough students whose native language was one of the 43 languages found in the Toronto school system, training should be provided in that language.

This pull towards multicultural education has since spread to the Greater Toronto Area and is gradually making its way through the school systems in Eastern Ontario and Southwestern Ontario.

Mr. Cressy was only 32 when he was elected chairman of the Toronto Board of Education in 1976. He denies being the youngest to hold the position, but he was the first one to serve two terms in a row.

"I look back at things and I see there was a grassroots phase, an academic phase and now there is leadership in senior positions in the public sector phase," he says.

Before accepting his present job at the University of Toronto, Cressy was a city alderman from 1978 to 1982 and a city and metro councillor from 1980 to 1982. He even began a campaign to run as an NDP mayor after incumbent John Sewell was defeated in 1980.

"Art Eggleton wasn't setting the world on fire and I figured I could get a coalition together to run for mayor."

"I've always found this is the place for the soul, a place to recharge, reflect and reconnect," says Gordon Cressy, seen here with his sons Joseph and Keith.

It was then that the United Way offered him a position as president. The job description fit his background so well that he scooped up the offer immediately.

"Years ago when I was working with kids to adapt them to the system, it seemed it wasn't the kids with the problems, it was the system and the structures."

Heading the United Way was an opportunity to make the structures work more effectively for disadvantaged people; to help them break out of a perpetual cycle of hardship. The organization is not just a safety net for people, it's a trampoline, he says.

Many people ask Mr. Cressy if he regrets not being part of the NDP team now that the party has just stepped in to lead the provincial legislature.

"I'm hopeful that I can influence behind the scenes," he says. "And I'm not in a bad position to do that right now."

"Eleven years in politics in Toronto was enough. . . there'll be a time I'd like to run something again, but I've always felt it's good to leave a place when people want you to stay."

"You go as hard as you can wherever you are, and there is a time to move on to something else. Each place will always be a part of you. And it keeps you on the creative edge, challenging you each time out."

"In the old days I had to be out every night 'trying to save the world'," he says with a chuckle. "Now I realize I'm not going to save it — but the kids might."

Perhaps one day the Cressy kids will also find the small cottage tucked deeply within the woods of Haliburton as much an "affair of the soul" as their thoughtful father has.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANTS

The Haliburton, Kawartha & Pine Ridge District Health Council has undertaken a project to develop a plan for mental health services in the district. The main focus of the plan will be to develop a mental health system to serve people with chronic mental illness.

To support the work of the project Steering committee, the District Health Council will hire several individuals on a part-time basis, as Community Development Assistants. The Community Development Assistants will assist in linking the plan with several specific target groups. First Nations communities, people with addictions/mental illness dual diagnosis and people with physical impairment and mental health needs.

Individuals interested in these positions should have direct experience with at least one of the target groups listed above, and be able to work comfortably in the community with a minimum of supervision. If you are interested in one of the positions, please send a letter and accompanying resume, by August 30th, 1991, detailing your experience and why you are interested to:

What is a stroke?

A stroke results from an interruption in the blood supply to part of the brain. Without a continuous, adequate supply of oxygen-rich blood, nerve cells in that area cannot function properly. The nerve cells of the brain control the way we receive, interpret and respond to sensations and information, and most of our movements as well. If some nerve cells are unable to function, then the part of the body controlled by those cells cannot function either. For example, a stroke may produce difficulty in speaking, inability to walk, or loss of memory.

For more information on blood pressure or stroke, contact your local office of the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Ontario.

Celebrating the family of faith

Phillips family shared community's hopes, fears, and joys

by MARTHA PERKINS

TEARS AND LAUGHTER. Praise and thanksgiving. Fellowship and music. And even a wacky twin sister carrying a huge yellow inner tube. It was a perfect culmination of the Phillips family's nine years in Haliburton.

On Thursday night, more than 250 people filled the Legion auditorium to remember those years and let Rev. John Phillips, his wife Florajean and their children, Jenny Nicole and John William, know they won't easily be forgotten when they leave for a new parish in Etobicoke September 2.

"This is one of the largest congregations I've had the honour to speak to," said Master of Ceremonies Doug Hodgson, a long-time member of St. George's Anglican Church. "Your presence shows the great admiration we feel for the Phillips family."

"John is an exuberant minister, one who makes Christianity fun and joyful. His family shows Christian love does work and it can be fulfilling and we can reach our goals. Florajean was the only minister's wife who's given me a hug and John's the only minister who's a sky pilot," he said, referring to Mr. Phillips' adventure of parasailing high above Haliburton Lake one summer's afternoon.

With the Phillips' arrival in 1982, the congregation grew and for four years they debated whether or not to build an addition. Four years after Mr. Phillips' leadership and tolerance through "those long, endless meetings" saw the opening of the new sanctuary, choir rooms and basement meeting rooms, the addition is almost paid for.

"He also has performed miracles on himself," Mr. Hodgson noted. Each March, the priest has a decidedly bedraggled look. As he left for the family's yearly month-long vacation in Florida, "Oh, he was a sight. You'd think the moths had been after his beard."

"But when he came back, he was an Adonis!, a Greek god!, and you'd think Florajean was Jenny Nicole's sister."

Almost on cue, and entirely in character, Mr. Phillips stood up, puffed out his chest and strutted, much to the enjoyment of the laughing crowd.

Instead of being sad that the Phillips are leaving, the communities of Haliburton, West Guilford and Wilberforce (it's a three point charge) should feel blessed that they've had nine years to share together, Mr. Hodgson said.

Members of the large and flourishing Sunday School — dressed in everything from khaki pants to mini skirts as an indication of the Phillips' broad appeal — then thanked the family, especially Mrs. Phillips, for their hugs, happy smiles, teachings and guidance. Mrs. Phillips has a way of remembering all the important little things which made each one feel special, they said before they sang Amen, Praise the Lord. Because no one else was sure of how to play the tune, Mr. Phillips volunteered at the piano.

As the children sang, Mrs. Phillips sat with her children, a man-size box of Kleenex quickly being depleted as she passed tissue after tissue down the line. Throughout the evening, it wouldn't only be the Phillips who needed the tissues.

Sandy Stevens, leader of the youth group, Hi-Y, said the Phillips will always be extra special because Mr. Phillips officiated at her wedding and baptized her two sons. "They're very much our friends. We love to be with them."

The youth group then presented gifts to Jenny Nicole and John William. The one thing Jenny Nicole has asked for is a 1-800 number so she can keep in touch with friends. Her gift was a close second best — a pink telephone for her bedroom. John William, the big sports fan, got a Blue Jays pennant and a fistful of baseball cards.

To Mr. Phillips, Bronwen Winsley of the Server's Guild gave him a t-shirt with a colourful circle of Biblical sayings "for when he has no ideas for his sermons." The priest quipped, "She's been listening to too many of my sermons."

On behalf of the Anglican Church Women, his wife Barbara Hodgson then presented Mrs. Phillips with a beautiful stained glass window with an etching of St. George's in the centre. "What will our Christmas bazaars be without your gingerbread houses? You've been a shining example in every area of your life. We send you off with all our love, prayers and best wishes."

"We have shared our hopes, our fears, our aims, our commitments," Jan Shipley, president of the Haliburton Legion Ladies Auxiliary, told the Phillips. Even though the family is leaving for Christ the King after the September 1 service, "we shall still be joined in the heart. . . Each of us has our own treasured memories so we can go forth in peace and good cheer."

Ave Petch of the Chancel Guild wrote a poem about the Phillips' nine-year stay in the Highlands. "Within an hour (of their arrival) the town soon saw and heard John's trademark laugh and bushy beard/ Wee John William at the age of two, became the parish pet. . . Jenny Nicole's talents are many and at school she is smart. Her friends all tease and giggle a lot. . . Florajean arrived on a diet as she baked and baked for others/ But her first month of May, to her dismay, blackflies fiercely attacked. . .

"In the Phillips' past nine years, the congregation has grown, we have shared many joys and sorrows/ What we laugh and joke about now will mingle with our profound memories throughout our tomorrows."

Mrs. Petch presented them with a "special edition" of newspaper articles about their years here — "and there's no scandals. It's purity!"

Now Gary Burk had the pleasurable task of introducing Mrs. Phillips' long lost twin sister, who despite the lipstick and eyeshadow, dangling earrings and long red and white gown, looked an awful lot like John Winsley without his beloved mustache.

In the arms of "Jezebel Jean" was a huge yellow inner tube. Ever since Mrs. Phillips broke her tailbone in a fall, she's been carrying around with her an inflatable cushion. Jezebel Jean called it a wimpy cushion and presented her with the real thing as everyone laughed at such a spectacle.

"I wouldn't do this for anyone," Mr. Winsley in drag told Mrs. Phillips when he too could no longer contain his laughter. "In all seriousness," he added, "we're fairly new to the village and the Phillips family helped open the door to the community. They made us a part of the family and if there's anyone I'd like to adopt as a sister, it's you."

He then presented her with a gallon of orange paint, her favourite colour. "I love you, we all

Much to everyone's surprise — and uproarious laughter — Florajean Phillips' long lost sister, Jezebel Jean, arrived at Thursday's farewell, and under all that eyeshadow she looked a lot like John Winsley. John Phillips didn't know quite what to think of her affection

Combined choirs lift voices for Phillips family

do — you're family so just stay that way." "Here I thought this would be a serious sort of thing," said Legion President Ed Pickard as he took to the podium next to present Mr. Phillips with a plaque in appreciation of the years he spent as branch padre. "He's definitely a friend."

After a presentation from Ken Stevens on behalf of St. Andrew's in West Guilford, Margaret Robinson and Tom Hodgson gave the family a huge $1,000 bill beach blanket "for a crying towel." Then Tom Hodgson explained how he had been commissioned to do a painting as the parish's going away gift. "A painting is not just a copy of life, it exists in its own right," he said. During the outdoor summer services, Mr. Hodgson has often enjoyed the shade provided by the huge maple tree in front of the rectory, beside the church. One Sunday, he nonchalantly asked Mrs. Phillips what her favourite season was. Of course the lover of orange said autumn. And what's her favourite time of day, as she sits atop the hill overlooking Head Lake? In the early morning when she goes for walks, she replied, especially when the mist is rising off the water.

The look on Mrs. Phillips' face as Mr. Hodgson unveiled a painting of this beloved scene was something few could forget. It said without words that Mr. Hodgson had captured a perpetual memorial of the beauty she has come to love and cherish, a gift which will carry her back up the steps towards the church every time she looks at it.

Given that Mr. Phillips had been a music teacher before he became a priest, and music has played such an important part in worship and celebration at the three churches, the evening would not have been complete without the three wonderful performances of the combined choirs of St. George's and St. Margaret's, and a heart-felt duet by Glenda Burk and Barb Fawcett.

"To all of you, we want you to know we love and appreciate you very much for being who you are," said choir director and organist Bill Gliddon, crediting the Phillips with inspiring them to grow outward and find the best in traditional and contemporary musical expressions of faith.

Mr. Gliddon will always remember Mrs. Phillips as a gracious hostess, opening up her heart and home to everyone. "You're an unforgettable lady, and despite all the teasing, you persist in loving my own favourite colour."

More surprisingly, the relationship between organist and minister "can be awfully touchy. They have to work together and after almost 10 years, John and I are still speaking to each other." He too will remember Mr. Phillips' booming laugh. "It was such a cheerful sound which reminded us there was still happiness and wholesomeness in the world."

After singing Find Us Faithful and We Give Thanks, the choir was joined by Mr. Phillips for a touching Lord's Prayer.

If people hadn't been crying before, they certainly reached for the Kleenexes when Florajean Phillips addressed the crowd. Her voice overcome with emotion, her eyes barely managing to keep back the tears, Mrs. Phillips said "My father always said, 'Love me, love my family.' You've always made my kids important and when someone makes my family important, then I feel important. I look at all of you and I don't just see friends, I see family. Our home will always be open to you — all at once, too."

Mr. Phillips said he can cope with all of this by saying to himself, "I'm not leaving until September." Coming to Haliburton was a blessing, once cherished by each one of them. "Love reaches out and touches one another. Thank you for your love."

As people hugged and cried for one last time before they walked outside into the cool night air, even the heavens seemed to take part in the celebration. Without a drop of rain, the sky was lit up by a fireworks of lightning coming from the west — towards Etobicoke.

Knowing that John William was a big sports fan, Sandy Stevens, the leader of Hi-Y, presents him with a handful of baseball cards. It's hard to say good-bye to friends

COMMUNITY NEWS

Murchisons rally for a fun picnic

COBOCONK NEWS

by: SHEILA LAKE

Mrs. Jeanne Egginton of Oakville visited her brother, Stan and Jean Bellinger, at Bexley. Other visitors were June Hawkins of Toronto and Catherine Claridge, and daughters, Ryanne and Paulette of Workworth.

Sympathy goes out to the family of the late Al Haley, who lived on Maritime Road, west of Cobocok who passed away very suddenly last week. Also sympathy goes out to the family of the late Mary Limrick and to Beatrice McCaughey of Norland in the sudden death of her son, Delbert Parkes.

"Fuzzy" (Donald) Timleck from Langley, B.C. has been visiting his mother, Amy Timleck, his sisters, nephews, nieces, cousins, aunts and uncles in the area.

Your truly enjoyed a good visit with Percy and Phyllis Lytle near Kirkfield, on Wednesday afternoon, also I visited Stella McLeish in Lindsay last week.

Linsey Little and Stacey of Newmarket, visited with their grandparents Mr. & Mrs. Rod Harrison at Norland.

Mr. and Mrs. Clint Hirstwood took their niece, Sharon Lake of Peterborough to see "Phantom of the Opera" in Toronto. The Murchinson reunion was held on August 4th at the home of Ken and Barbara Murchinson. About 60 attended.

Sadie (Murchinson) Callan was the oldest Murchinson attending. Arn Endicott, husband of the late Grace Murchinson travelled the farthest, coming from Dunville. The youngest Murchinson attending was the little granddaughter of Elsie (Murchinson) Stewart, little Alexandria Stewart. Family members from Acton, Dunville, Peterborough, Lindsay, Little Britain, Port Hope, Norland, Cobocok, Kirkfield and Bolsover were in attendance.

A family shower was held the same day for Terri King, who will marry Phillip Revell, son of Sadie Callan, on Aug. 24th.

Betty Moore and Betty Davey enjoyed a holiday at Cape Cod and are now home.

Congratulations to Gladys Routley on her Aug. 16th birthday.

Earl Powell is home following his surgery in Peterborough Civic Hospital.

Mrs. Ada Fisher of Lindsay was a visitor at our home last Saturday.

Andrea, Kara and Trish Faulkner of Peterborough spend last week with their grandmother, Myrtle Faulkner.

Potluck a success for joyful UC folk

by Maurine Finlay

A large number of enthusiastic followers, adherents and members of the United Church of Canada in the Gooderham, Tory Hill and Wilberforce areas attended a bountiful Pot Luck Supper in the Gooderham United Church last Monday evening, Aug. 12. A spirit of good will and fellowship prevailed throughout the evening and it was evident that there was support shown for the United Church cause in the Tory Hill Pastoral Charge.

Out of town guests in attendance were Rev. Jim Phelps, area minister for the Northern Pastoral Region, Rob Luxton, curate-in-charge for the Anglican Church in Wilberforce and Mr. and Mrs. Hadden Gillespie of Haliburton. Hadden is a member of the Presbytery Commission for the Tory Hill Pastoral charge. Rev. Jack Spenceley of Haliburton was also present.

The evening's entertainment consisted of a number of most delightful spiritual and lively numbers performed by the "In Harmony" singers which is an Ecumenical group of Christians from the Haliburton and Minden areas. Audience participation in some of the numbers added to the enjoyment of all.

The evening was also an occasion to celebrate Kristal McGee's birthday (the area student minister) when she was presented with a beautiful birthday cake, made and decorated by Edith Dewey, and a purse of money from the United Church congregations in the Tory Hill Pastoral Charge. After the strains of "Happy Birthday to You" the cake was cut by Kristal and passed around. Comments made by Ivan Hunter regarding Kristal's ministry here were very appropriate. Kristal thanked those responsible for the planning of this event and all present for their interest, participation and birthday presentations.

It is regretful that Kristal's sojourn in the area will be ending August 25. Her ministry was well worthwhile and beneficial. It can be said that her enthusiasm reached no bounds. She will be missed but she is to be congratulated in accepting the call to the ministry as her life work, so the very best to her as she pursues her course in theology starting this September!

Baptist congregation gathers at St. Andrews

WEST GUILFORD NEWS

by: ELEANOR COOPER

Congratulations to Tom Watson and Jackie Hutchings on their forthcoming marriage at Maple Lake United Church on Aug. 24. The wedding dance is open to all family and friends at 8 p.m. at the Centre.

The Baptist congregation worshipped for the first time in St. Andrew's Church on August 11th, 1991, since their building is undergoing renovations and moving (not far) but to slightly higher ground, just back of where it was previously situated.

Red Cross swimming lessons have been going on at Pine Lake during August. Instructors are Paula Brown and Samantha Gillen for the well-attended classes.

White-water rafting is underway on the waters on the Horseshoe Lake Rd. off

Hwy. 35, on August 24 weekend.

Sherron Sisson, Social and Recreational Coordinator for Drop-In Centre of Home Support, welcomed me on Aug. 15, to the Guilford Centre when I wanted to find out what all the activity was. Evelyn Morgan, leader of the fund-raising event of Line Dancing from 10 a.m.-4 p.m. that day, leads the Haliburton line dancers. She told me that 97 people had registered, and believe me, it was noisy with happy action, swinging arms and feet, music and chatter when I walked in. Everyone seemed in good spirits. Refreshments — home-made to convey Haliburton hospitality — were available throughout the day. Two video cameras were recording the dancers from various points, some of which were: Toronto, Lindsay, Bobcaygeon, Peterborough, Stanhope, Brighton, Mount Albert, Cincinnati, and Hamilton. It looked like a success. It sounded like a success and will probably be repeated if the volunteers don't wear out! Bunny and Bruce Burton led the dancers through the day. Demonstration by various single groups were presented as well.

Gerald Morrison is home for a few weeks between courses in his co-op programme at Waterloo University.

Minden Rotary makes generous donation to add to county's large-print book library

COUNTY LIBRARY NEWS

by: JOEL LEVIS

IN KEEPING with its goal of community service, the Rotary Club of Minden has made a generous donation to the Haliburton County Public Library for the purchase of large print books.

Prompt action by the staff of the County Library has seen many of the titles selected and received with processing continuing at a steady rate.

It is hoped to have the books in place by the end of the month. All titles will have a special sticker attached identifying the Rotary Club of Minden as donors, and although they will be placed in the Minden Branch, they will be available for use by everyone in the county and of course, through InterLibrary Loan.

Covering a wide variety of interests — westerns, mysteries, etc. — these titles are ideal for those with vision problems wishing to continue the joys of reading. And some people just prefer to read them because the print is so large!

Collections of Large Print Books and their close cousins, Talking Books are to be found in most of the branches of the Haliburton County Public Library.

Hicks renew family ties at fun reunion

The 25th Hicks family reunion was held on the Civic Holiday weekend with 95 descendants in attendance, the farthest persons coming from British Columbia.

The eldest lady was Gladys Dugan, 89 years, and James Dugan, 88, was the oldest gentleman. Mr. and Mrs. Dugan live in RR1 Minden and are in reasonably good health. Gladys is the daughter of Amos Hicks.

The youngest baby was Christopher Coombs, 3 weeks old, infant son of Ken and Glenda Coombs of Oshawa.

The families gathered at the Lochlin Community Centre for the noon and evening meal. The children enjoyed many races while the adults played horseshoe and enjoyed a real good visit.

These families are the descendants of Isaiah and Margaret Hicks. It was 115 years ago in 1875 when Isaiah and his wife Abigail Hill journeyed from Prince Edward County with their three sons, John, Charles, Amos and their daughter Elizabeth to their new homestead in Lochlin. Mary Jane and Ellen were born here.

Margaret Hicks, who married Nelson Clark, came about this time and settled here as well. Their children were, Jack, Florence, Helen, Louise, Edith and Martha.

Queen's Park needs new ways of doing things

MPP
Dennis Drainville

THE NEED TO CHANGE how decisions are made at Queen's Park is still as strong and urgent now as it was before you elected a New Democratic government last fall. This is because simply changing political parties doesn't necessarily mean the rules are going to automatically change.

The present system by which legislation goes to a committee, after second reading, is just not effective. Under the present system, the government having studied a great deal of a particular issue, and having prepared the legislation, is in the position of having to defend the legislation and thus the possibility of amendment is limited. Therefore what we need to see is a process that would be more akin to the use of committees in Quebec or in Sweden where the public has input into the process before the legislation is written. Presumably this will provide some ownership on the part of the public towards government initiatives. It will also allow for more debate and more opportunity to amend the proposal.

A simple idea whose time has come. In fact it was used in the drafting of the new Rent Control Act and there has been little outcry from anyone. And this is for a very controversial piece of legislation. But because we consulted before we acted, everyone got what they needed out of the legislation.

The second part of the committee process is to strengthen the committees ability to get at the truth. Right now the committees have no control over their budgets. If they did they could hire independent experts to ask some pretty revealing questions of the government and the witnesses representing interest groups (which often are there only to present their members concerns).

THANK YOU

I WOULD LIKE to say thank you to friends and relatives who made my birthday extra special. An extra special thank you to my husband Jack and my best friend Cathy for putting everything together so everyone could have a good time. My birthday cake will be one I will never forget. Thanks for the twinkie surprise Cathy. Love Chris

27-P-20

I WISH TO express my sincere appreciation to my family Donna and Paul Thain, Jean and Joe lies in their planning and preparation of a very special day Saturday August 10th in honour of my 85th birthday. Jean and Joe opened up their home to make it possible to receive and entertain so many of our family and friends, former Hydro and hunting buddies from as far as Whitehorse, Yukon, North Carolina, Ottawa, Belleville & Picton, also Port Stanley. A special thanks for the recognition afforded me by Martha Perkins and the Echo. I was showered with so many beautiful cards, flowers gifts and phone calls that made me feel very blessed and honoured. Thank you all. Walter Webb.

27-P-20

I WOULD LIKE to commend the summer staff at WeeCare Day Nursery on the wonderful float they entered in the Rotary Parade. Special thanks to Vic Hutchings for the use of his trailer, to Gary Burch for donating all the lumber and materials and to Scott Rae for constructing the entire frame. Thanks also to Erin Kennedy for volunteering her help all summer and during the parade. Their help was greatly appreciated!

IN MEMORIAM

PICKENS, JOSHUA E. — In loving memory of Joshua E. Pickens who passed away Aug. 18, 1975. Always precious memories Of days when you were here We hold you close within our hearts And there you will remain To walk with us throughout our lives Until we meet again. Lovingly remembered by his wife and family.

32-B-20

IN MEMORIAM

RIEL — In loving memory of a dear mother & grandmother Martha who passed away August 13, 1972. Mom you are not forgotten. Though on earth you are no more. Still in memory you are with us. As you always were before. Lovingly remembered by Son & daughters & daughter-in-laws & grandchildren.

32-P-20

COOPER-TREVOR WM. JOHN

We marked your grave in Ingoldsby We planted your favourite flower And we know that the time we shall meet again Gets closer every hour. This year has gone so quickly But this is our constant prayer That God will keep close watch over us Until we meet you there. With cherished memories of a faithful husband to his wife Ruby (Blair) and loving father of his family and their spouses Blythe, Ruth, Etale, Eric, Edie, Lila and Blair, Dear Grandpa to 17 grandchildren.

32-P-20

RONALD WILLIAM MCPHAIL — In loving memory of our darling precocious son, Ronald William McPhail, who went to be with Jesus August 20, 1981. It seems but a little while to us Across to that strange country — The Beyond;

And yet, not strange, for it has grown to be The home of Ron-Ron of whom we are so fond; He makes it seem familiar and most dear. And so for us there is no sting in death, And so the grave has lost its victory. It is but crossing — with bated breath, To find our beloved Ron-Ron waiting on the shore, More beautiful, more precious than before.
